WESTERN KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY
POSITION STATEMENT
CONCERNING THE ADMISSION OF INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

Western Kentucky University is committed to promoting international understanding through intercultural exchange, with these resultant values: to provide the WKU community with a broader perspective; to provide the University with valuable resource people; and to promote understanding of the emerging world social system, cross-cultural harmony, and means for achieving effective cooperation among nations and peoples. This commitment is in accordance with Bulletin statements regarding institutional purpose and objectives.

It is generally acknowledged that life on an university campus is enchanced by the cultural milieu provided by the enrollment and matriculation of a reasonable number of students from different cultures and ethnic origins. In view of the increasing internationalism which is occurring (and which has been promoted by this country), the increasing incidence of foreign travel, study and research, and the acceptance of employment in foreign countries by Kentucky citizens, Western students and faculty, and the institution itself benefits from the enrollment of well-qualified international students. Since these students provide first-hand knowledge and understanding of foreign cultures, educational systems, business practices, and political regimes, they make an important contribution to the University's educational programs and to the area served by them.

Western Kentucky University is authorized to offer baccalaureate programs of instruction, those graduate programs of instruction which are approved by the Council of Public Higher Education, programs of a community college nature, and programs of research and service which relate to the needs of the primary geographical area in which it is located. Although such an institution provides immeasurable benefits to the state in terms of education, research and service, the cost to the taxpayers of educating each student is a significant amount. As a result out-of-state enrollment, in state institutions, including international students, is limited to a maximum of fifteen percent.

The international student population of a regional university such as Western should comprise a relatively small portion of the total out-of-state enrollment and receive only a small portion of the available financial aid. Since these students are required by federal regulations as well as by the University to be financially responsible, scholarship and assistantship funds need be extended to international students only for the purpose of attracting those who have demonstrated academic superiority.

Western Kentucky University's Office of International Student Affairs, which administers the program of English as a Second Language, was established to coordinate the University's efforts to increase the capacity of these international students to benefit from and to exert a positive influence on Western's educational programs. While welcoming possible future increase in the number of applications received from international students, the University recognizes the responsibility involved in screening these applications and realizes the desirability of attracting quality students from many different areas of the world. A concentration of students from two or three foreign countries is discouraged. The intent of the University is to administer a controlled program which brings selected international students to the Western Campus and takes maximum advantage of their presence.

State institutions of higher education have long recognized the advantages of recruiting competent students (and faculty) from areas beyond the state's domain. Admission standards which must be met by out-of-state students tend to result in their enchancing the academic quality of the student body. In addition, exchange of ideas, cultural awareness, and intercultural cooperation are promoted. Finally, the presence of students from other states and from other countries is an indication of prestige, since such students provide a measure of the esteem with which the institution is held outside its own geographical area.

UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSION CRITERIA AND PROCEDURES FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

Alumni Spring 2001

WKU's International Student ENROLLMENT

Is Growing and Growing and Growing and Growing and Growing!

by Bob Skipper,
WKU Director of Media Relations

Western's international student population continues to grow. And grow. And grow.

Figures for the spring 2001 semester show about 425 international students enrolled at Western, up from 250 in the spring 2000 semester, according to Dr. Larry Caillouet, Director of International Programs.

"From the number of applications our office is receiving, I think Western can count on more than 500 international students this fall," he said.

The enrollment growth is surprising because Western doesn't have international recruiters, Dr. Caillouet said. The University is promoted internationally by the English as a Second Language program, but that alone isn't responsible for the growth, he said.

"The main thing is the word-of-mouth from international students already here," Dr. Caillouet said.

For graduate students, Western's decision to waive non-resident tuition has made a difference, he said. All non-resident graduate students pay the resident tuition and fees rate. Non-resident graduate students are charged the non-resident rate, but the University awards a graduate fellowship equivalent to the difference between resident and non-resident rates.

The largest numbers of international students are enrolled in public health and computer science programs, but enrollment is spread across all academic colleges, he said.

Enrollment also is spread though the international alphabet in 53 countries from A (Albania) to Z (Zimbabwe). The nations with the most students are India, 159; Korea, 42; China, 31; Taiwan, 24; Japan, 14; Canada, 13; Brazil, 13; and Mexico, 12.

To celebrate the contributions of international students, the International Center plans to add 24 flags outside the facility at 1536 State St.

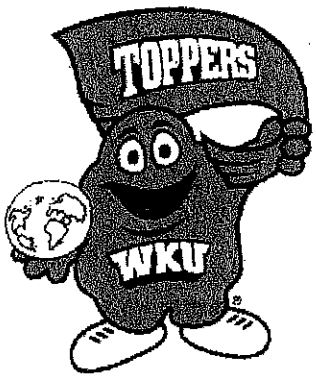

The flags from the United States and the 23 nations with the most international students at Western, were to be placed in April.

"We're sprucing up the International Center to make it more functional for activities and make it look and feel more international," he said.

After renovations, the International Center will fly proudly the flags from 24 different nations that are representative of WKU's international student population.
