On Our Cover

The illustration on our cover for this issue is another sketch by artist, Christeen Winston Snavely of Glasgow, Kentucky. The subject of the artwork is the Clark home in nearby Russellville, Kentucky, where, in the Fall of 1861, a group met and seceded from the Federal Union in order to be admitted to the already-formed Confederate States of America.

The major order of business seen to at that convention is best stated by quoting the actual Ordinance of the Kentucky Convention: "That we do hereby forever sever our connections with the Government of the United States, and, in the name of the people, we do hereby declare Kentucky is a free and independent State, clothed with all power to fix her own destiny, and to secure her own rights and liberties." Of other importance was the election of the first Confederate Governor of Kentucky, George W. Johnson, as well as setting up a Provisional Government.

The house has had an addition to each side since that time; however, it is seen here as it looked around 1861. The house is now used as offices.

CLARK HOUSE

Parts of the following article were taken from a story in the July 6, 1972 edition of "The Courier-Journal" and are reprinted here to give a greater view of our cover house.

The interview of Mrs. Wister C. Clark was taken by Leah Larkin of the Courier-Journal; however, because of its length, it is impossible to include the entire story. Mrs. Clark was extremely devoted to history and her heritage throughout her life.

"The plaque on the outside of her two-story white brick house reads: 'This tablet marks the site of the first meeting place of delegates from 43 Kentucky counties to a convention held for the purpose of forming Kentucky as the 13th Confederate State of America. This meeting was held November 18, 1861.'

"At the meeting, an act of secession was passed, declaring Kentucky a Confederate state and establishing Bowling Green as the capital. George W. Johnson of Scott county was elected the first provisional governor. But since Kentucky was under Federal control during most of the war, the Confederate state of Kentucky operated in name only. Officially the state government at Frankfort never succeeded and Kentucky remained a part of the Union.

"The house, reminiscent of architecture of the Federal style, was said to have been built in 1820 by a Mr. Forst, a Russellville cabinetmaker. Some Russellville residents still have furniture with his name on it, although none of his direct descendants can be found in the town. There are, however, families with the name 'First.' According to one legend, Forst's slaves stayed on in Russellville and adopted his name, changing the 'o' to 'i'.

"Through the years, the house has changed under the hands of various owners. The front porch and white columns are gone. The red brick has been painted white. The huge ballroom on the second floor where the convention was held has been converted into several rooms which now serve as Mrs. Clark's apartment.

"Today the home, with its ivy vines and precisely groomed shrubbery, serves as a gracious and elegant reminder of the past in the midst of Russellville's office and commercial buildings.

Granville Clark, an attorney whose offices are in the first floor of the building added a bit of trivia to the story: "'My father always told me that my grandmother was a doorkeeper at the convention, but I wonder.'

Mr. Clark is well-known throughout the south-central Kentucky region for his keen interest in history and preservation. He has been very successful in his work with the Shaker colony preservation in Auburn as well as in the town of Russellville.

He adds: "'Modernity and progress are not always synonymous. Let progress and industry complement the local culture. There's no reason to lose the history of the community.'"

A SHORT SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF HENRY MILLER

The following sketch was written by Franklin Gorin, author of Times of Long Ago, about 1876. This sketch is found on page 114 of that work, which is available through this society.

"Henry Miller, the second settler in Glasgow, came here from Greenbriar County, Virginia. When he first came to Kentucky he lived in Carpenter's Station, Lincoln County, for a year or two. Before he emigrated to Kentucky, he had married Nancy Black, in Virginia, and had two sons, James and John. David was born in the Station in Lincoln County, May 28, 1798. "Mr. Miller arrived here, Glasgow, in the fall or winter of 1799, and settled in a log cabin on the north side of Main Street, about midway between Green and Main streets. Henry Miller, M.D., was born there November 1, 1800. Two daughters, Betsy and Sally, continued on page 45."

A GIRL OF THE SIXTIES

The following story was written by Mrs. Sallie Burnam Bent, a daughter of Elder John Burnam of Bowling Green, Warren County, Kentucky. Elder Burnam was the Treasurer of the Provisional Confederate Government of Kentucky; the family resided in Bowling Green during the War Between the States. Submitted by a friend of the society.

"The opening of the War Between the States had not touched me personally till May, 1861, when I saw a brother leave with the first regiment from Kentucky to serve the South. I never saw him again. The following winter he was brought home from Virginia in his gray uniform to be buried beside our mother in the old cemetery.

"In the fall the Confederate army entered Kentucky. I remember distinctly the military bearing of Hardee and the dapper little Frenchman, General Beauregard. During the stay of the army in Kentucky, my father was connected with the Provisional Government that had been established. Being lame, he could not serve in the army, but he gave three more sons to be Southern cause.

"General Johnston with his troops evacuated Bowling Green in the next February, and before daylight the next morning the town was alive with Yankee soldiers, searching for Confederates who might have been left behind. Many persons were treated with discourtesy, but we were more fortunate. One of the soldiers told my little sister he was hungry. Overhearing this, my mother gave him food, and for the act of kindness the good fortune of being respectfully and kindly treated was ours.

"On a bright September day the army wagons of General Rosecrans drew up before our house, and the officers announced that it was to be taken for his headquarters. As it was a large, old house, my mother was told we could 'occupy the back of it or move out.' We took the first offer and took 'the back.'

"In a short while the old house, with its pillared dignity and old forest trees, was ablaze with blue uniforms and brass buttons, while a group of awe-stricken little children stood in silence with their mother and watched the desecration of the old house by the Federal troops. They occupied the house nine months, Rosecrans leaving it in charge of General Manson when the continued his march south.

"During the winter the house was used by the Federals, a regiment of soldiers from Kansas joined the troops in this town. This regiment was made up of drafted men, and among them was a distant relative of ours. He was allowed to visit us frequently and was known to the officials in the house. After he had been in the town several weeks, he said to my mother one day: "As you know, I was drafted into this army, but my sympathy is with the South, and I will not be in a regiment at war with her. I want your help to get away from here."

"I well remember seeing my mother rise with the words: "Henry, you know if I help you I will be in prison before night, and possibly this house burned." But seeing the disappointed look on his face, she turned to me with a motion of her hand: "Maybe Sallie can help you."

"I was a resentful girl of thirteen years, who had never lived "in the back of the house" in my life, and I loved my home in spite of the ruin and destruction each day brought it. Henry turned to me saying: "I only want a suit of the boys' clothes, and to have it placed in the garden where I can get it tonight."

"Of course, I will help you" I replied. "Come on upstairs," where I opened a closet filled with the clothing of my three brothers then serving in the Southern army. With a "help yourself," I left him.

"After a time, Henry came into the hall and told be the suit he wanted was lying on the bed. Could I put it under that old quince tree in the garden that night? He added: "You know this is a serious business for us both, and a risky thing for you. You must not let anyone see you put that bundle in the garden. When it's there, I will do the rest."

"I realized then the gravity and the risk, but I never faltered. Saying, "you will find the bundle there," I bade him good-bye.

"At dusk, with the bundle in my arms, I went out into the garden, dodging the family, the servants, and more than all, the Yankee sentries who made their rounds at stated intervals, and in every direction one could see a blue coat. I was fortunate to evade them, and you may be sure I was out early the next morning to see if the bundle was gone. It was, and I drew a breath of relief.

"Two or three days later, a squad of soldiers came to the house hunting the 'deserter.' My mother could tell them truthfully that she knew nothing about him. It never occurred to the soldiers to question the white-faced girl who stood beside her. Later on, we learned that Henry passed through the lines and joined the Southern army, and made a valiant soldier for the South.

"Looking across the long stretch of years to this good day, it affords me infinite pleasure to remember that a girl thirteen years old scored one for her beloved Southland!"

PEDDICORD LETTER
Submitted by a friend of the society.

From: Kelion Franklin Peddicord of Quirk's Scouts of Morgan's Kentucky Cavalry, Confederate States of America.

Glasgow Junction, Kentucky

Dear Sister:

I received, some time since, a request that I would write you an outline of my experience in "the tented field" up to the date of my capture. It will necessarily be very imperfect, and a very brief one, and perhaps it will be as uninteresting as it is brief. Yet I can assure you that nothing less than a long and continued interview could give you any just conception or description of my experience and many exploits as a member of Morgan's Cavalry.

However, I trust this sketch may both please and interest you. To me, it will only be a reminder of the long years of hardship, exposure, and suffering in a Lost Cause which was so gallantly and devotedly battled for that one would almost accuse the God of Battles of injustice and impartiality; of using the Fates against a people in such a sacred cause. That I have been a soldier in the service of the Confederate States is not, and never will be regretted. I am proud that I was one who did not hesitate to join the standard of those in defense of their country's rights. Had I not done so I would be hiding myself with no little severity. Shame alone would cause me to blush myself out of existence.

But pardon my digression. I will commence my sketch. You are already aware, perhaps, that I enlisted in the cavalry service of the Confederate States of America at Glasgow, Kentucky, in October 1861, and in a company that was then being formed by Second Lieutenant James W. Bowles, who had been duly authorized by the Confederate Government to recruit a company of cavalry.
At Glasgow forty men were enlisted, and after some experience in drilling and a few exciting engagements, such as scouting and skirmishing, in which we were sometimes supported by Capt. John H. Morgan and his company, - a favor we often returned, - we were ordered by General Buckner to Bowling Green, Kentucky. On reporting to the General we were instructed by him to report to Captain Morgan, commanding Camp Burnham, one mile south of Bowling Green, where we went into camp.

Here we found the Lexington Rifles, Captain Morgan's old company; Captain Allen's and Capt. John S. Churchill's company partly completed, with which our company was, by order of the commandant, soon afterward consolidated. The two captains, by the toss of a copper, decided who would become the commander, and Lieutenant Bowles, our then acting captain, being the successful one, Captain Churchill justly fell heir to the second in command, the first lieutenancy. Our first lieutenant became the second lieutenant of the new company, and the other first lieutenant became our third, the very responsible position of orderly sergeant falling to your most humble servant, and so on down the list.

At that time Captain Morgan had in camp three full companies, amounting to about two hundred and seventy-five men, all splendidly mounted on Kentucky's best: Morgan's own Company A, Captain Thomas Allen's Company B, and Capt. Bowie's Company C, forming "Morgan's Squadron," as it was afterward known, and being under the command of Capt. John H. Morgan, with First Lieutenant Basil W. Duke, of Company A, as acting adjutant, subject to the command of General Buckner alone.

After remaining in camp near Bowling Green for some time, drilling and making other preparations necessary to meet the foe successfully, we moved to an encampment called "Camp Allen," five miles south of Bowling Green, between the L. and N. and the Memphis Branch railroads, where we drilled constantly until the latter part of November, when we were ordered to the front to form a portion of the advance guard, then near Green River, under the command of General Hindman. Here we remained on active duty until the withdrawal was caused by the enemy's flank movement and the fall of Fort Donelson, about the first of February, 1862. On the retreat the squadron was the rear-guard of our army, that being the second time we had had charge of the post of honor.

Leaving Camp Green on the 12th, - my last sight of home until the 27th June, 1865, - we passed through Bowling Green and encamped four miles south of town. On the 13th our column reached Franklin, Kentucky, and the evening of the 14th we were encamped one mile south of Mitchellville, Tennessee. Here General Breckinridge, who was now in command, General Buckner having gone to Fort Donelson, learned that the enemy's advance had reached Bowling Green. I shall not soon forget the night we camped near Mitchellville, for we shared the fate of the reindeer in having our beds on the snow.

A SHORT SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF JAMES M. CULP

The following sketch was written by Franklin Gorin, author of Times of Long Ago, written about 1876. This sketch is found on page 124 of that work, reprints of which are available through this society.

"James M. Culp, the brother of Daniel Culp, who erected the first tanyard in Glasgow, came here at an early day in this century. Another brother, Josiah, also moved here a few years later. They were all good tanners; they came from Bourbon County, Ky. Of their parentage or education we are almost ignorant. They were industrious, frugal, and deeply pious; men of more than ordinary mind; quiet, humble citizens, highly esteemed and worthy of the trust and confidence of their associates. James M., the subject of this notice, never married; he was a local Methodist preacher. His brothers were also members of the same church, and we believe local preachers. They were remarkable for their strict honesty, veracity and fair dealing. They had many apprentices, all of whom became worthy citizens, and most of them members of the Methodist church from the holy teachings and example daily set before them by that truly good man, James M. Culp. One of them, Rev. Eli B. Crane, was an eloquent and profound, theologian, a pious man, and a useful citizen."
