VOL. 6, NO. 1

Jan., Feb., Mar., 1984

During the four weeks of November and first week of December, 1906, Mr. R. T. Martin published a series of articles in The Record, a Greenville newspaper, which he titled PIONEERS. Beginning with this issue of The Heritage, we will reprint those articles, but may not follow the 5-parts exactly, for we will be combining some articles in whole or part, because of space requirements. For the most part Mr. Martin's wording will be followed exactly, but some punctuation, or other minor matters, may be altered. In a few instances questionable items are followed by possible corrections in parentheses. It is believed you will find these articles of interest and perhaps of value to many of our readers.

PIONEERS

Our grandfathers and great-grandfathers, many of them, came to Kentucky over a century ago; Virginia is said to be the mother state. A primitive name of Kentucky was Transylvania territory. It was also called Kentucky county, and was organized and established out of Fincastle county of Virginia in 1776. In 1781 the county of Kentucky was divided into three large counties, Jefferson, Fayette and Lincoln and in 1783 these counties constituted a judicial district in Kentucky and a high court was established in Danville, the first capital and headquarters in Kentucky. The court was opened up and held first by Judges Floyd and McDowell.

Emigration commenced in Kentucky as early as 1774 altho Boone and Finley came several years earlier. In 1773 Thomas Bullitt and the McAfees came to Kentucky from Virginia and made some land grant surveys of the country about Louisville and Salt River, also of the country where Frankfort is located. It is said in 1774 James Harrod built the first log cabin in Kentucky, where Harrodsburg now stands; in 1775 one Richard Henderson, for whom Henderson county was named, together with a company from North Carolina, made a deal and a treaty with the Cherokee Indians and acquired a large territory of land, which they called the colony of Transylvania Territory in North America. This deal was opposed and not recognized by Virginia, but was compromised by land grants. Emigration then commenced more rapidly. Col. George Rogers Clark, the military commander of Kentucky, opened up the way for the settlement of Kentucky. His headquarters were at or near Louisville. The city of Louisville was commenced in 1870 (1780?). In 1783 Daniel Broadhead opened up a store in Louisville; he brought his goods down the Ohio river from Philadelphia, Pa. Emigration continued to increase, forts were constructed in various places and counties were formed.

Towards the close of the 18th century, in 1798, sufficient numbers of pioneers had settled in Muhlenberg county, and the county was organized, being about the twenty-fifth county in the state. Muhlenberg was named for Gen. Peter Muhlenberg; he was a German. Ohio county was organized the same year of Muhlenberg, but years before a fort and rendezvous was established where Hartford now stands; from this place prospecting parties would go out over the country. On one occasion two men were out in the western part of Muhlenberg county near Pond River. Having gotten their clothes wet in the rain, they went into camp toward night and were drying their clothes by the fire when a party of Indians came along and fired on them, killing a man by the name of Lou Allen. The other man fled, having on only his shirt; he ran that night to Hartford. The Indians claimed that they shot to scare them. Allen was killed near a pond, which was afterwards called the Lou Allen pond.

The first settlers of Muhlenberg county were people of moral worth and merit; they were people of nerve, enterprising and industrious people; determined, they braved the hardships and obstacles of a wild wilderness country and unbroken forest; they came to stay, to conquer and subdue; it was no easy job to settle down in an unbroken forest, with all the disadvantages that confronted them. Their toils and industries were burdened with agricultural, commercial and transportation disadvantages, yet they used all their energies and skill the best they could in laying the foundation for future greatness. Our forefathers had advantage over the present time by having a wonderful range for stock; pea vines knee high all over the country, fast cane breaks in places, wonderful crops of mast; horses, cattle or hogs fared well without feed. Another advantage they had was a cheaper music than that of the modern improved piano, organ or guitar -- they were blessed with a nightly serenade of the wild melody and music of Whippoorwill, bullfrog and nightowl. Another advantage was that of an abundance of game of all kinds.

The old pioneers lived well, altho they did not have many dainties and extra prepared foods as now. The manner and method of cooking was very different from the present way; they had large fireplaces and burned wood. Cooking was done in pots, skillets and ovens now out of use. They beat and chopped their meat into sausage with cleaver and hammer made at the blacksmith shop; one thing they had that rivals the present age was their fruit orchards; most of the pioneers had orchards of apple and peach trees, seedlings they would bear every year in abundance; dried apples and peaches was an industrial commodity with the old settlers; their cider and vinegar has never been equaled by modern ingenuity; some of the apple trees planted by the old settlers stood and produced fruit for thirty years and a few trees are said to have stood for fifty years. Their whisky is said to have been very fine, made at the various still houses in the county. The pioneers labored under great disadvantage in clearing up their lands; they had to grub up all the undergrowth and take saplings up by the roots in order to plow the ground with the kind of plows they then had. They did a great deal in the improvement of the farms; the vehicles of conveyance were very different from now -- there were but very few buggies and no two-horse wagons. Ox carts and ground sleds were used for farm purposes; horse back and walking for traveling; but in nearly every neighborhood there was one or two large six-horse belonging to regular wagoners, who did the hauling of the produce to the market for the people on points along the Ohio river. This was done until Green river was navigated; then a landing and a warehouse was established at Kincheloe's bluff on Green river, above South Carrollton. When South Carrollton was established, a landing and warehouse was opened up there and the hauling was to and from that place. The people in those days made principally all their wearing apparel; in nearly every home there was a loom, cards and spinning wheels, which gave music to the pioneer industry. Public traveling was done on what was called stage routes. There was a stage route from Owensboro to Russellville passing through Greenville by way of Rumsey on Green River. Rumsey at first was a flourishing little place and named for Edward Rumsey, once a reputable lawyer of Greenville.

Calhoun was then built up on the opposite side of the river and Rumsey did not improve much afterwards. Calhoun was named for Judge John Calhoun. McLean county was named for Judge Alney McLean. These three were pioneers and were men of distinction. McLean was a representative in Congress in 1837. Calhoun was a representative in 1835 and circuit judge in Muhlenberg county in the 1840's; but it seems that Muhlenberg county and Greenville have been unlucky in the after years in furnishing representatives in Congress.

In the early settlement of the county, stores were very few. James Weir and James Craig opened up the first store in the county. After a time Craig and Weir dissolved partnership and Weir and one O. C. Vanlandingham became partners. After a while they separated and each run independent. Some other stores were established. Weir secured his trade mostly in the Western part of the county, Vanlandingham in the Eastern part. They bought up the produce of the county and gave in exchange goods. A yard of calico for one hundred pounds of meat. They would ship their produce to New Orleans in flat boats, as that place was the trading point for all the Western country. Weir would take his trusty servant, Jube, and ride horseback through to Philadelphia, buy his goods and ship them down the Ohio river to what was then called Yellowbanks, now Owensboro, and then haul them to Greenville. It is said that Weir and his wife made their wedding tour horseback to Philadelphia. Weir and Vanlandingham were both good financiers and made fortunes for the time and age in which they lived.

 Since writing the former article on the pioneers, the people of the Third Congressional district of the state of Kentucky have elected Dr. A. D. James to represent them in the Congress of the United States, which honors Muhlenberg with a third Congressman. From McLean to Rumsey there was a period of eighteen years and from Rumsey to James a period of sixty-nine years. Now this long lapse of time has not yet been because Muhlenberg had no men worthy or competent, but it has been on account of other counties stepping in ahead and winning the Congressional honors.

The pioneer families made out with as few goods as possible; they paid for calico, domestic, cambric and muslin fifty cents per yard; flannel and gingham seventy-five cents per yard; broadcloth eight to ten dollars per yard; socks and stockings seventy-five cents to one dollar and 25 cents per pair; men's beaver hat ten dollars, pair boots ten dollars; broadcloth coats from forty to fifty dollars; sugar 35 cents per pound; salt seven dollars per barrel; nails thirty cents per pound; shovels and spades one dollar and fifty cents each; barlow knife 50 cents; paper pins twenty-five cents, foolscap paper fifty cents per quire; tin bucket one dollar and fifty cents; bridle bits one dollar and fifty cents. These are a few of the prices on goods -- the price of other articles range according.

The stylish men's dress suits consisted of blue and black broadcloth of a frock and swallowtail cut. Beaver and fur hats were worn. The overcoats cost from forty to forty-five dollars; they were fine English goods, generally of a light brown color cut a loose frock, shaped much as overcoats now, only they had from three capes attached and scalloped around the edges and adorned with white buttons; these coats would last from ten to twenty-five years properly cared for. The pioneer people did not buy a suit of clothes every change of the moon or ever six or twelve months; they took good care of their clothes. There was a fashion in early times of having tight pantaloons, as they were called; they were so tight that straps were fastened to the leg of the pantaloons and passing under the instep of the shoe or boot to keep the leg of the pantaloons from working up, especially when riding. The common wear of the men was homespun jeans, blue or brown color, cut in frock or sleeve jackets called roundabouts; some few wore as a novelty buckskin pantaloons, a coon or a fox skin cap.

The stylish ladies dress suits were silk, satin, worsted and gingham; leghorn hats with broad brims and high crowns, trimmed with ribbon and artificial flowers; these hats and bonnets cost from ten to fifteen dollars; there were no plumes, feathers or bird wings and furs used in those times and no frizzling or blondining of hair. The common dress of women was mostly homespun checked linsey and cotton, neatly made, with sun bonnets as head wear. The elder women wore lace caps and of other fine material, cut and shaped somewhat on the order of nightcaps, only they were loosely made, trimmed with ruffles and ribbons and they were becoming; and when the women would go visiting or to church and take off their bonnets, their caps would show up nice; each lady would like to have the nicest cap. In those days it was a custom for the men and women to sit separately in church, the women on one side of the house and the men on the other, the women as well as the men removing their hats; and if a man should accidentally invade the woman's side of the house, he would have been considered a little off of his base and wanting in good mannners. Mixing up would have been an insult to the preacher and to the amen corner.

The pioneer did not have the advantage of steam power; there were no steam saw mills or grist mills; water mills and horse mills were used for the grinding of meal and flour. Houses were built of logs, split slabs and dressed puncheons were used as a substitute for plank and what plank they obtained for use was from the two-man saw mill. The two-man saw mill was operated by digging a trench in the ground and then building a scaffold over it which was called a saw pit, and a log was squared with a broadax called the saw stock and then put up on the scaffold; one man would get on top of the log and one stand under, in the trench, and with a whip saw going up and down, they would saw lumber. Some men followed this business and it was astonishing the amount of lumber that was sawed that way.
