We continue herewith the R. T. Martin articles on

PIONEERS

Edward Weir set up the first steam saw and grist mill in the county about 1848; afterwards other mills were established. The pioneers of Muhlenberg county were principally from Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina, tobacco raising states, and when they commenced raising tobacco in Muhlenberg county, for a while they had quite a novel way of marketing their tobacco; there were no tobacco buyers prowling around, and they were the origin of the society of equity. They would prize their tobacco in hhd. with a pole passing through the center of the hhd., the end of the pole protruding at each end of the hhd., and when the hhd. was finished up they would get two poles and make shafts and fasten them to the protruding pole and then fasten the other end of the shaft pole to the hames on a horse and then roll it to Kincheloe's bluff on Green river for shipment; they had some way to check the speed of the hhd. rolling down hill; they would roll the hhd. through mud and water, if necessary, but would generally pick dry times to do the hauling. They would then ship it to New Orleans, the tobacco market in those times, and when it reached New Orleans, the tobacco inspectors would take it in charge and upon inspection, if they found it much damaged, they would condemn it and so mark it. This was called bulleyeing, and they would roll it in the river as worthless. The shipper would lose his tobacco and his labor would be in vain. William Martin raised and shipped the first crop of tobacco in Muhlenberg county; he was one of the first manufacturers of tobacco in the state of Kentucky and most of his descendants have followed the tobacco business since.

There was a great lack of educational advantages among the pioneers -- but few school houses and they were very rude and antique. The county being thinly settled, the children had to go some distance to school; school houses were built of logs; fireplaces half the side of the house burned wood in sticks from seven to eight feet long; benches were made of slabs, no desks other than split puncheons roughly dressed, bottles and vials used as ink stands, the ink consisted of polk and elder berry juice; the pioneer received no public money for school purposes; schools were made up by subscription; school teachers were not plentiful like they are now; teachers did not have to hold certificates to teach school; that matter was agreed upon between the parents and the teacher; a competent teacher in those days was one who could spell, read and write and could work and explain examples through long division or to simple fractions or to the double rule of three in Smiley's arithmetic -- and be of good standing. Such a teacher would get from twel to fifteen dollars per month during the fall and winter months. Teachers were then generally local and the teacher would take up his school; he became king of the situation and on the commencement of his school, he would read his rules governing the school, commencing, first, second and third and on to the tenth or twelfth rule; he would then back up these rules with well-prepared hickories, and as a general thing the rod was often used in the enforcement of his rules and no doubt done much good in many cases.

When a young (?) advanced sufficiently that the country teacher could advance them no further in mathematics and hard reading, those who desired a better education would apply to some higher school. Many of the children of the pioneers went to school but little and some lived and died without knowing how to read or to write their names; this was greatly on account of no educational advantages. There was but very few newspapers and pamphlets; school books were of a primary kind; histories and scientific works were scarce; some families were entirely destitute of books of any kind, not even a bible. A man that had a fair English education was considered a Solon and a Socrates of the time.

The early settlers of Greenville, some of them, came from the mother state, and posed as F. F. V's., and some were Old Presbyterians and they believed in education; so they built a brick house, in the first years of the nineteenth century, twenty by thirty five feet, with a partition wall making two rooms, and called it the Greenville Seminary; they used this house as a schoolhouse and for religious services until a church house was built, some twenty five years after. This seminary stood for about eighty years and was used by the people of Greenville all these years for school purposes. By attending the school taught at the Greenville Seminary in its early history, a person could get a very fair English education for the times.

The religious service of early times was conducted on a different scale from the present; Church houses built by the pioneers were rude and rough, the scattering school houses were often used for religious services; prayer meetings and preaching were often conducted at a residence in the neighborhood consisting of John Bone, Richard Reynolds, Jesse Murphy, Michael Lovell, David and William Campbell, William and Huston Martin, Ezekiel Rice, Duran Alcox and others. A revival of religion was started in that neighborhood by having prayer meetings at the residence of the neighbors; this revival continued to grow in earnestness and devotion until a Cumberland and Presbyterian church was organized by the Rev. James Johnson and in a short time a church house was built of hewed logs, in a nice grove, and called New Liberty; in after years it became Old Liberty. This house was dedicated and declared to be a union church house; it became the center of religion in the county and the mother of preachers. Revivals and protracted meetings were held at Liberty every summer and fall; they were a kind of camp meeting; people from different parts of the county and some of the other counties would attend revivals at Liberty, taking with them provisions and would camp at these meetings; they would continue for weeks and they fired the spirit of religion throughout the county; preachers and exhorters of all denominations would gather in; preachers and exhorters were principally local; nobody was paid to preach in those days; everybody preached and exhorted that felt like it. Some of the old local and uncouth exhorters would stir up the congregation and bring tears and shouts better than those who were more systematic; during these meetings there was always large crowds and often persons from a distance would attend for curiosity; but when they heard the songs and prayers and the devoted earnestness of the pioneer, they were captured and would engage in the worship.

In those old time songs were a melody and a sentiment that has never been surpassed by the modern productions of music. The protracted meetings of Liberty continued for many years; after the revivals of Liberty, other churches were built in various parts of the county, the Methodists and Presbyterians built churches in Greenville.

There is one mystery connected with the pioneer revivals that has never been solved or explained, either by theology, science or experience. In the early revivals of the pioneers in Western Kentucky, during camp or protracted meetings or at religious services, persons would become subject to what was then called the jerks, and no other name has ever been given; it would operate like a fit of nervousness, continual jerking and twitching of the muscles and limbs, rapid bobbing of the head; and this would continue until the victim would become perfectly exhausted and apparently as dead. Often persons who would go to these meetings as sightseers and perhaps to ridicule the proceedings, would often become victims themselves to this mysterious influence; these jerks continued for many years.

Liberty was the mother of preachers; about a dozen of the sons of the pioneers became ministers of the gospel under the influence of the revivals at Liberty. The young men of the Liberty church neighborhood and adjoining neighborhoods that became preachers were Thomas and Mark Bone, sons of John Bone -- they left the county at an early date and the Bone family is now extinct in the county; George and Thomas Reynolds, sons of Richard Reynolds and uncles of John T. Reynolds, Sr., of Greenville -- they left the state at an early date; Charles and Kincheon Hay, sons of Kennard Hay, a local school teacher; they were brothers of Wiley S. Hay, a reputable farmer -- Wiley S. Hay represented the county in the legislature in 1847 and was afterwards a state Senator; Duran Alcox and Stephen Goodnight also left the county; Chas. Campbell, an uncle of L. E. Campbell, of the Southern Methodist Conference -- he located in California; Allen Boyd and Samuel Wilkins -- they remained in the county for a number of years; Wilkins went to Texas, Boyd died in the county; he was a power in the pulpit and an orator of his day; Henry and Felix Black, sons of Henry Black and brothers of Nathan Black who became a noted judge and jurist in the western part of the state; Felix Black located in Cincinnati and became a noted Methodist preacher. The Black family and the Hay family were reared in the Friendship church neighborhood.

The dwelling houses built by David Campbell and Hutson Martin are still standing in the Liberty church neighborhood, where they were built a century ago, and are now occupied by families.

There was considerable superstition entertained in the early history of the county, especially by the negroes; many sights were seen and heard that were mysterious and many tales were told about hobgoblins, raw heads and bloody bones; omens, symbols and signs were recognized and they were studied until they were reduced to a kind of science. The devil was thought to be loose in the woods and all the graveyards were full of ghosts, and some persons could not be induced to pass one at night and would go a mile or so around to avoid passing a graveyard at night. If a whippoorwill should happen to perch on a dwelling or near one and commence to warble his wild song, it would at once be driven off; the family would expect something was going to occur either for woe soon; if a chicken would crow before midnight, it would be considered a token and a sign of future occurrence, the nature of which would have to be studied; if a dog would howl on Sunday, it would be indicative of a death in the neighborhood; and many other foolish superstitions, some of which are now extant and are entertained by some persons.

After the pioneers had gotten the county in very fair condition, two men by the name of Buckner and Churchill came from the Eastern part of the state into Muhlenberg county and attempted to boom the county by establishing an iron works on the headwaters of Pond creek, bordering on the Friendship church neighborhood. After they had built a stack and made all the necessary arrangements, they run their works a few years and made a lot of pots, skillets, ovens and dog irons for the people; they then came to the conclusion that the enterprise would not pay, owing to the enormous cost attached and the lack of means of transportation and an insufficient amount of iron ore, so they abandoned the enterprise of the iron industry in the county and left in a worse condition than when they came. The people took great interest in the matter and would have been glad to have seen it prosper. During the operation of Buckner and Churchill, a negro belonging to them was hung, and as far as we know, was the first hung in the county; it is said that the negro attempted to take Buckner's life with an ax; he was tried and hung near Greenville on the Russellville road. There have been four men hung since, all negroes, two hung by the authorities of the law and two hung without trial. Two men were condemned to be hung about the commencement of the war, but they made their escape and were never executed. A negro belonging to J. H. Reno and a white man by the name of Arch Reatherford were the parties.

A short time before Buckner and Churchill came to the county, one John Staples, a wheelwright and wagon maker, together with six brothers-in-law by the name of Turner, some of whom were expert shoemakers, came to the county. These people came from Hawknest section in Virginia and they succeeded the Hays, Blacks, Allisons and Stembridges in the iron works vicinity. Staples and the Turners were some of the principal actors and advisers during the operation of the iron works. The Turners gave it tone and life for many years. A few years before they began to wane, and now Alfred Turner, the father of Jesse Turner, is the remnant and living monument of a once large family.

The old stack built by Buckner is still standing, tho delapidated and weather worn. Where once was life, mirth, enterprise and industry, now the stack stands desolate and alone and has become the habitation of owls and bats; the mighty has fallen; no trace save that of the stack to indicate that iron works ever existed in the county. Ayelett Buckner was the father of S. B. Buckner, a man of distinction and reputation; he was born in 1823 and while a young man in Muhlenberg county, he was appointed a cadet to the military school at West Point. Charles McLean, the son of Judge Alney McLean, was first appointed, but owing to bad health and an indisposition to attend the school, Buckner was appointed in his place. He graduated in 1884 (?) and remained as a teacher in the school until 1885 (?); then he commenced the study and practice of law. When the Civil war came up, he espoused the cause of the South and joined the Southern army as Brig.-General and came out of the war as Major-General. He was elected Governor of Kentucky in 1887. If Buckner has been born in Muhlenberg county, the county could claim the honor of a Governor and a Major-General.

A period from 1830 to 1840 was one of the most agitating periods, except the period during the Civil war, of the nineteenth century in Muhlenberg county. The first agitation that occurred during that period was the wonderful and astonishing falling of meteors; the next was the building of a brick court house; the next was looking for the judgement day.

About the time that Buckner was running his iron works, there was a craze started by one Wm. Miller, a native of Massachusetts, who claimed to have received a revelation written upon some hen eggs which he had found in a hollow stump and which led him to discover that the second coming of Christ would take place in ten years. This doctrine was preached, published and promulgated throughout the entire country; it was pretended to be backed up and sustained by the prophecies of the Scriptures, and thousands of people believed in it. It is said that he had a following of between fifty and one hundred thousand people and that some per- (?) died under the agitation of a strong belief in the doctrine. Persons in various parts of the country began to get ready for the great day, which was expected to take place in 1843 or '44: meetings and revivals were encouraged and kept up, but after the time fixed by Miller for judgement day had passed, the craze wore off and Miller found he had made a mistake in the calculation of his figures amounting to a period of a thousand years.

Some of the old pioneers of Muhlenberg were quite uneasy and worried about the matter, and it was jestingly said that Buckner closed down his iron works fearing to be running a hot furnace on the Judgement Day.

To Be Concluded.

KEEP YOUR FINGERS CROSSED!!! There is a rumor being circulated that new plates are being prepared for another reprinting of Otto A. Rothert's A History of Muhlenberg County. We have questions regarding the availability of the book about two or three times per week. As soon as definite information is secured, notice will be included in The Heritage, with directions for ordering. The book's return to circulation is something much needed.

The index to Vol. 5 of The Heritage has finally been printed and is available. It sells for 50¢, plus 20¢ postage for those which require mailing.

At the January meeting of the Society, the members voted to set a price of $2.00 per copy for each back issue of The Heritage. Previously, the cost had been based on the membership rate for the year of a desired issue. Many of the early issues are in short supply, so anyone wishing copies should check into the matter soon.

We have been advised that The Christian County Genealogical Society is planning for another HERITAGE DAY to be held, probably sometime in April, on a Saturday. Two of these meetings have been held previously and were very interesting and informative. Anyone interested in genealogy is invited to attend. Watch for a more definite date announcement.

A total of 100 copies of the 1870 census were printed, and half of them were hardbound. As this issue of The Heritage goes to the printer, slightly more than half of the softbound copies have been sold and about one-fourth of those in hard binding. Should you want either type, it is suggested that you order soon, as it is unlikely that the book will be reprinted. Typing has been started on the 1880 census, but no rash promises are being made as to when it is likely to be printed!

Mrs. Marian G. Hammers' abstracts from Book 2 of the Muhlenberg County Court Order books was completed on page 12 of the January, 1984, issue of The Heritage. With this issue of The Heritage, we begin a listing of the names and reel-page numbers of Logan County, Kentucky, in 1840. As with the others in this series, researchers will need to check the microfilm itself to get the number of persons in a given family. These records are from microfilm series M-704, reel 118.

Mrs. Mary Dunn Vincent, of Bremen, has recently sent us a list of graves which are not in any of Mrs. Hammers' four books. These were found on what was once the Giles Vincent, now the Jimmy Brown, farm on the Black Lake (Hwy. 175) Road, about three miles north of Bremen. Mrs. Dunn writes as follows:

When I first knew of these graves, they were on a high ridge in the center of a field, completely overgrown with persimmon sprouts and young trees. The indentions in the ground indicated where the graves were, but the tombstones were scattered about and it could not be determined which rock would go to which grave. After the ground was cleared of the young trees, the tombstones were piled around a large stump. Later, we tried to piece the stones together to record the names found on them. The following names were listed:

Willie H., son of S. C. & E. M. Evans
Born Aug. 10, 1857 (A small lamb decorated this tombstone)
Died 1859

Patsey, wife of David Evans
Born June 24, 1799
Died Nov. 2, 1816

Sarah, wife of David Evans
Born Feb. 9, 1804
Died Sept. 23, 182_ (couldn't tell last number)

David Evans
Born 180_ (Looked to be 1801, 1804 or 1806; sandstone in bad condition)
Died: age 65 (no date given)

Samuel C. Evans
Born Sept. 4, 1829 (Masonic Emblem)
Died Apr. 5, 1861

Name gone
Born July 21, 1849
Died when 18 years of age, 4 months & 6 days.

Roark
18 years of age

There were other roughly-hewn standstone markers, with no names.
