A SKETCH OF POWDERLY
Past and Present

-----
Part III
A Mining Town

The real birthday of Powderly was March 17th, 1887, when a band of men commenced the opening of a coal mine near the railroad two miles north of Greenville. This enterprise was a novel one; each man put in $25, those who did not possess that much in money, gave the sum in work. The site was at that time known as the Irwin farm, and was purchased for $650. John D. Longest was the first president of the coal company, and the following are some of the stockholders: Geo. Miller, Francis, Theodore, and Malchi Withers, Robert Whinnie, William Shrum, Al Shrum, Dick Mercey, Oliver Perry Hill, John Tennant, William Summers, James Roberts, Jack Spargo and Lewis Hunter. The village was named in honor of T.V. Powderly, who was before the public at that time as a leader in the great labor question.

Neat cottages were built by the miners who brought their families there to live, though nearly all of them came from different localities, they soon became acquainted, and all lived in harmony. There were very few "young folks" if any in the settlement, and the social conditions were very limited, now and then a dance would be given at some of the homes; it was conducted in a quiet, orderly fashion, and served to bring the people together, for there was little to break the monotony of their lives. The dances became less frequent, the parents were deeply interested in bringing up their fast-growing children in the best way they knew how. A neat school house on a nearby hill was soon finished and in 1890 many of the children from the mining village attended their first school. As "first impressions are most lasting," it must be said of that first teacher, Miss Bettie Pace, that she was a true one, for many of the pupils from that school, today occupy prominent positions in life, and nearly if not all, are honest, noble, and trustworthy men and women.

A Sunday school was organized at the school house, which was well attended. How eagerly the little folks waited for Sunday to come, when they would go with their father and mother, too, sometimes, to the school house on the hill, and there learn the old, old story.

Plans were soon made to build a church; the good women of the place solicited funds, they were assisted from every direction, almost. Many of the miners thinking it was to be a union church, gave large sums of money to aid in the cause, but when the church was finished, -- a large, well constructed building, -- it was dedicated as a Presbyterian church. This was a great disappointment to many; however they made the best of it, and with a regular preaching day, and Sunday school every Sunday, the village started on her upward trend.

The men worked long and late at the mines, yet some of them were never too tired at night to delve deeply into the histories of ancient times or read for hours and hours the master-pieces of literature. Is it any wonder that in such homes as these sturdy, manly boys, and studious, modest girls grew to noble manhood and womanhood.

In almost every hamlet or locality of few years' standing, there is some characteristic peculiar to that particular people. In this instance it seems that a certain peaceful, dream like repose, hovered over the village, like that so ably described by Irvin in Rip Van Winkle, the people lived the quiet simple life, the only true life.

With the purchase of Powderly by the Greenville Coal Co. there began a change. Nearly all of the former stockholders sold their homes as well as their interest in the mines, and moved away, some to other states, while a few remained near their native haunts. The vacant homes were soon filled with people from different places. A row of ten "box" houses, known as "Oklahoma Row," was built north of Powderly proper to accommodate the Negroes. There on summer evenings the soft, dreamy music of guitar or banjo could be heard while "the curly headed pickaninnies played around the little cabin door" and the older children engaged in sports on the village green. The social life of the village changed also, there were a "goodly" number of grown up boys and girls but their form of amusement was the play-party instead of the dance. Such games as Chase the Buffalo, susie in the Ring, Dan Tucker, Laugh and go Foot, The Girl I left Behind me, Eight in the Center, Snap, Scat and many others were played until early bedtime, then the gallant swain escorted his lady fair to her home. Usually some other member of her family was present too. Though shut out as it were from the outside world, and the contaminating influence of city life those girls were very different to those of today. It would be hard indeed to find better women, morally, mentally, and physically, than those who have spent the formative period of their lives within the shelter of rural homes far from the "maddening glare."

Many the time love's sweet story has been told in Powderly but the Weddings which followed were private affairs usually occurring at the bride's home or that of some nearby minister, except in one instance, when the ceremony that gladdened two hearts was solemnized at the church, which was well-filled with witnesses. The "chivaree" which was sure to follow the wedding however private was a public announcement. With few exceptions the wedded ones lived happily together, divorces were almost unknown, for "with secret course which no loud storms annoy, flows the smooth current of domestic joy".

As Nearly all of the Presbyterian church members had moved away, the church was left uncared for and unused save by the birds, which in great numbers, built their nests in the cupola and by the children who frequently passed through the ever open door, to play.

Occasionally, some of the older girls would stop there from their evening walk and in the dim light sing and play the simple songs they knew. After a few years the church was bought by the Christian denomination, to which it still belongs. Several ice cream suppers were given to help secure funds to repair the building.

A Baptist church was organized in 1909 and work on the commodious new building is being rushed. The ladies of the Baptist church have organized an "aid society" and are doing splendid work.

This sketch would not be complete without some allusion to that man whose ennobling influence is still felt in Powderly, Frank Long, who came there from Butler County in 1898 and built up a school equal if not better than any in the county. He organized a brass band for the young men, he was a leader in church work, in fact, any worthy cause received his earnest support. He kindled the fires of enthusiasm in the minds of his pupils and led them to see the possibilities of a greater future. To such a mind, such a will as his, nothing seemed impossible, but his physical being was not strong enough to hold for long the prisoned soul which struggled for the holy and pure in this life, and on Sunday, September 13, 1903, that soul returned to Him who gave it. In the death of this man Powderly lost the one who had done more for her elevation and upbuilding than any other.

The mines at Powderly today produce more coal than ever before. A new opening has been made, in which modern methods and up-to-date machinery are used, many new houses have been built, yet with its population of some 500 there is but one store except that owned by the coal company. There is not a milliner's shop or doctor's office in the village. The free school is only in session six months, and then without any music teacher. However the easy accessibility of Greenville and Central City help to fill these deficiencies. The village still retains to some extent its former peaceful simplicity, though occasionally slight quarrels have occurred, and one death was caused from an explosion in the mines. Except for these things and the gossip which is sometimes afloat, there is but little of importance to break the monotony or harmony of the lives of those living in that village sheltered by the hills. Such is the life story, past and present of Powderly.

In conclusion let me add. Many people seem to have the erroneous idea that the miners are a semibarbarous people. Far from it indeed, many of them earn more than $100 per month and have all the necessities of life and many of the luxuries. It is not so much what particular work a man does, as the life he leads, that counts, and just as true, just as loyal hearts beat "neath the coal dusted clothes in the darkened recesses of the earth's bosom as those which throb 'neath immaculate vests and swell dress suits on its surface.

The Society has recently placed on loan in the libraries in Central City and Greenville, the microfiche of the International Genealogical Index, as prepared from records of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Based on various sources, these fiche may be of help in tracing families, but unfortunately there are many errors of fact included, so the data must be used carefully.
