(by Anna K. Gill)

Dainty, little birch tree,
 Standing there apart,
Swaying soft green drop'ries
 Over milk-white bark.

How the wind must love thee,
 Playful as thou art
To the softest music
 Of his great toned harp.

How the sun must love thee;
 Whether bright or dim,
Thou dost catch his sunbeams,
 And smile back at him.

How the rain must love thee,
 Falling softly down,
Bathing each green leaflet,
 'Ere it turns to brown.

Lovely, little birch tree,
 Standing smiling, fair,
Bringing to our Southland
 Daint'est beauty rare.
