We turn again to one of the many historical articles written by Mr. R.T. Martin and published in the early days of this century in the Greenville newspapers. This one was copied from one of Mr. Martin's scrapbooks and unfortunately bears no date or place of publication. It has much history in it, and may be of interest to some of our readers.

SOME MUHLENBERG HISTORY

In the early part of the 19th century there lived in the southern part of Muhlenberg a man by the name of Thomas Anderson. This man's wild, reckless character made him the terror of the peaceful law abiding citizens, who had settled in that part of our county. Neither life nor property was thought to be safe, when this man was around. These suppositions were doubtless true, for it was Anderson's purpose to get money, no matter how, just so he got it.

Anderson was a man of considerable wealth for that early day. He was an extensive land owner, having a large farm in Muhlenberg, one in Tennessee and one in Illinois. He also traded in negro slaves, and many a negro, so tradition says, was carried by secret paths from one of these farms to another, in order to keep the real owner from locating him.

In that day a great many people came here prospecting. It is said that if one of these prospectors ever stopped at the Anderson plantation that he was never heard of any more. In the spring of 1827, a man by the name of Logan came here from Virginia. He had with him two fine horses. After riding over a large part of the county he came into Anderson's neighborhood. At this time Logan had about decided to locate on Caney Creek. Anderson dissuaded him from this, telling him that he had better wait until he had seen more of the country, and offering to show him around. This offer was accepted by Logan who went to Anderson's home to spend Sunday before setting out on the prospecting trip. Logan was never seen again. His horses were taken North, but no explanation was made as to Logan's mysterious disappearance.

This evident murder so aroused the people that Anderson's home was raided by the Regulators and his fencing all burned. Anderson now became alarmed and sought to make his escape from the county, but was arrested in June, 1827, and taken to Owensboro, but what became of him there tradition does not say.

Anderson's associates were for the most part lawless characters like himself, and lived, either on his plantation or on adjoining plantations. Among his confederates and tools were, Bill Caps, Dave Blake, George Groves, Jake Jones and John Sherrod. All of these except Sherrod was whipped and driven from the county. Sherrod met death at the hands of the Regulators. His brief and tragic history will form the subject of another article.

After Anderson was captured his land here fell into the hands of Cage Drake, and later became the property of Mosley Wells, who was at that time the largest land-holder in Southern Muhlenberg.

This was nearly one hundred years ago, but the foundation stones of the Anderson home can yet be seen, as can the spring at which he watered his stock. The only one of the old buildings left on the place is the house which Mote Pennington was living in 1833, when he was taken by the Regulators. This one old building, and some plainly marked trails running North, South, East and West, are the only record that is left of Tom Anderson in Muhlenberg, except the memory of his evil deeds.

NEW BOOK

The Circuit Court Order Book 1, of Muhlenberg County KY. has been transcribed and typed from the original. These records are not available on microfilm. This book covers the years from March 1803 to June 1807.

Lawsuits of every kind are recorded: murder, unpaid debts, hog or stock stealing, the use of profane language (swearing) in public, for not appearing on a grand jury, and numerous other reasons. (Seems a lawsuit was the proper and most common way to settle even the smallest of disputes.)

There are 102 pages, with a complete index. The price for softbound is $14.50 and hardbound for $19.50, plus $2.50 shipping and handling, per book. KY residents add 6% sales tax. Order from: Muhlenberg County Genealogical Society, c/o Harbin Memorial Library, 117 South Main Street, Greenville, KY. 42345-1597.
