BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

William Graham Duncan (1851-1929), superintendent and co-owner of the McHenry Mines, was called “The Coal King” of Muhlenberg County, Kentucky. Born in Scotland, Duncan came with his parent to Airdrie, Kentucky, in 1855. His father Andrew Duncan, a practical miner, had been invited by Lord R. S. C. Aitcheson Alexander to supervise Lord Alexander’s mines. After the Airdrie furnace was abandoned, Duncan operated coal mines near Paradise and Airdrie, where William G. grew to manhood. After managing a number of mines in Ohio County and other places, William G. returned to Muhlenburg County in 1900 and opened two successful mines. Duncan served as president of the W. G. Duncan Coal Company which was sold to the Peabody Coal Company of Chicago in the 1950s. On May 16, 1878, Duncan married Mary H. Hamilton, and their children were Katie Belle, Andrew W., and W. Graham Duncan, Jr. Andrew served Duncan Coal Company as secretary-treasurer and William G., Jr., was its mining engineer.
