Administrative History: Founded in 1922 by Charles Foster Kent as the National Council of Schools of Religion, a non-profit membership organization to promote the teaching of religious studies in American colleges and universities, the Societies' members are now broadly interested in issues involving education and it has no political or religious agenda.

The mission statement adopted in 1998:

The Society for Values in Higher Education is a fellowship of teachers and others who care deeply about ethical issues – such as integrity, diversity, social justice and civic responsibility – facing higher education and the wider society. SVHE members pursue these activities through publications, projects, regional gatherings and an annual national meeting.
