BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Born 19 January 1915 in Bowling Green, Kentucky, to Rufus and Patricia (Fenwick) Grider, Dorothy Grider demonstrated an aptitude for art at an early age. She recalled that by age five she would lay on her front porch, drawing the comics from the Park City Daily News. Self-described as “determined about everything,” this promising artist took advantage of her opportunities. While completing her education in the Bowling Green city schools (class of 1933), she registered for art classes taught by Mildred Curd Hawkins and Reed Potter and twice won state poster contests sponsored by the Kentucky Federation of Business and Professional Women’s Clubs. Her submission in the 1930 competition won second place at the national level. Beginning at age 14, Grider spent her summers studying in the Madison Avenue penthouse of the Phoenix Art Institute of New York, whose faculty included Norman Rockwell and Franklin Booth.

Grider continued her artistic education while attending Western Kentucky State Teachers College (now WKU). During her freshman year, she studied under Ivan Wilson and joined Mrs. Wells Covington and Mrs. J. A. Robenson at the latter’s studio in her Scottsville Road home to create oil portraits in four sittings. To win a scholarship to the Phoenix Art Institute for her fifth summer of study, Dorothy submitted a pencil sketch of an old rundown house in the country and a portrait of Pete, an aged African American man who worked for Colonel J. W. Kreuger. Determined not “to waste any more time,” Dorothy completed her undergraduate degree in English from WKU in three years (1936) and immediately accepted a summer position at Camp Bon Air in White County, Tennessee as counselor responsible for arts, crafts and land sports.

Grider then moved to New York City, living at the Three Arts Club where all residents were female dancers, artists, or musicians. In return for working as an assistant monitor, Grider received free tuition for her studies at the Phoenix Art Institute. During this time, she paid her bills with commissions from freelance work, including illustrating beauty parlor posters, sheet music covers and Catholic holy cards. In 1939 Grider gave public school teaching a try by accepting a position in the mountains near Clinton, Tennessee. There a third grader told her she was “too small to be a teacher.” Saving her money that school year, she returned to New York City. For the next two years, the U. S. Playing Card Company of Cincinnati, Ohio paid her a weekly salary of $35 to illustrate playing cards. Outstanding among her freelance assignments for this period is the October 1940 cover of American Girl, a Girl Scout publication.

In 2009 Grider wrote: “That is what I wanted to do, magazine illustrations, but the camera came into vogue and photos took over.”

Trading playing cards for greeting cards, Grider next accepted employment with Norcross Greeting Card Company. From stylized Christmas cards depicting Santa Claus, carolers, and altar boys to other occasion cards featuring cocker spaniels, a favored motif, Grider’s talent brought smiles to recipients across America. When her ballerina design caught the eye of the Ballet Russe, it became their official Christmas card. During World War II, Grider created several cards in the Norcross series for American servicemen.

Grider’s big break occurred when a Norcross co-worker showed illustrations of her whimsical pink and blue dogs to an agent for children’s book illustrators. Within the first year of utilizing an agent’s services, Grider illustrated her first book, The Little Rabbit Who Wanted Red Wings (1945). Contracts with children’s book publishing leaders Saalfield and Rand McNally led to as many as six book assignments at a time. Grider quickly became known for the accuracy of her work and believed “a natural curiosity into almost every subject and the ability to draw everything from fire engines to horses are the prime requisites of a good illustrator.”

Recognized as Rand McNally’s most popular children’s book illustrator, Grider also illustrated coloring books, puzzles, paint sets, sheet music covers, family film strips, textbooks, and trace and color sets. Rand McNally, Saalfield, Artcraft, Whitman, C. Scribner’s Sons, Dennison and Grosset & Dunlap all published her freelance work. Her commercial work included manufacturers’ catalogs, magazine advertisements and real estate publications. Some of her paper dolls depicted film and television stars such as Liz Taylor, Kim Novak, Eve Arden, Shari Lewis, and Loretta Young as well as the casts of The Partridge Family, The Nanny, and Lost Horizon. In the late 1960s, Grider returned to designing for the United States Playing Card Company as a freelance illustrator, earning $35 per design.

An independent woman, Grider “wanted to travel, to write books, to illustrate.” In 1950 she went to France on the commission she earned from designing a set of limerick-themed napkins for Dennison. Originally planning to have a two-month vacation and armed with $2000 in traveler’s checks, the artist ultimately stayed for seven, completed several freelance assignments while in Paris, painted a portrait of the former model for Rodin’s sculpture The Kiss (1889), studied art at the Académie de la Grande Chaumière in Paris and visited ten countries. Wherever she traveled that year, Grider photographed scenes that inspired her and found time to paint, draw, and sculpt. Other trips included Cuba, the American West, Mexico, Nassau, and numerous destinations across Europe.

Grider had diverse interests. While living in New York City, she enjoyed being a “first nighter” at theaters and was occasionally hired in the non-dancing role as a “super” or “walk-on” at the Metropolitan Opera. Grider turned her love of the opera and ballet into a children’s book manuscript entitled Bravo Goes to the Opera, but C. Scribner’s Sons turned it down as too sophisticated for children. An avid and accomplished photographer, Grider also enjoyed woodworking, gardening, and swimming. The latter was perhaps a nod to the time she spent at Limestone Lake, her parents’ private fishing resort at the northwest edge of Bowling Green. Grider spent most of her time in the northeast; in 1953, she moved to a house owned by the father of close friend Lydia Gudemann overlooking the Delaware River at New Hope in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and maintained a studio there for the rest of her life. She nevertheless stayed in contact with Kentucky and her hometown. Beginning in the 1930s, the Park City Daily News, most especially the “Suds” and “What D’Ya Know by Linda Listens” columns, routinely updated area residents on “Dottie” and her career. In the 1940s and 1950s, Louisville Courier

Journal columnist Rhea Talley also reported on her comings and goings. The Little Majorette (1959), which she wrote and illustrated, featured pennants and flags sporting a “W” in honor of her alma mater. From time to time, her work was exhibited in Kentucky, including four shows at her alma mater; in 1951 the Art Director of the Speed Museum in Louisville expressed interest in mounting a one-woman show of her work. In the summer of 1957, Grider appeared on WKCT radio and signed books at David Helm’s book and record store. When she spoke to several hundred third graders gathered for a program at WKU’s Kentucky Museum in 1987, she told them: “if you want to draw someone in blue jeans, put on your blue jeans and sit in front of a mirror.”

Grider welcomed opportunities to exhibit her paintings and photographs. In 1937, her work hung alongside that of Norman Rockwell in a New Rochelle, New York public library. Grider exhibited her paintings at the Gramercy Galleries in New York City in 1946; one year later she had a one-woman show at the Barbizon Hotel. In 1950, the Studio Guild of New York City selected Grider as one of four artists for a nationally traveling exhibition. The next year her watercolor of Notre Dame Cathedral hung at the Contemporary Galleries in New York City before being acquired by The Collectors of American Art. She actively exhibited her work until 2011, just a year before her death on 18 February 2012.

COLLECTION NOTE

This collection consists of correspondence, papers, sketches, drawings, mockups and other artwork relating to the life and career of artist and illustrator Dorothy Grider. Particularly well represented is her work as an illustrator of children’s books and as a designer of greeting cards and playing cards. An inventory is in Box 1, Folder 1, along with lists of Grider’s books and some of her artwork. Box 1, Folders 2 and 3 contain biographical data on Grider and genealogy notes.

Box 1, Folders 4-8 contain Grider’s personal and professional correspondence. Included in Folder 4 is a 1918 letter from a family friend or relative in military service describing the atmosphere in France in the closing months of World War I; letters relating to Grider’s study at the Phoenix Art Institute in New York and the financial obstacles she faced; letters of praise from readers, authors and publishers for her work as an illustrator; and some early income statements from her playing card designs.

Box 1, Folder 5 includes Grider’s descriptive letters to her family about her travels in Europe and North Africa; a letter from “Frank” with a detailed primer on purchasing and importing a vehicle from England; requests from aspiring authors and designers to employ her artistic talents; a letter from a Caterpillar Tractor Company employee praising the children’s book The Busy Bulldozer; and numerous letters from publishers who contract for her services, particularly Rand McNally of Chicago, Saalfield Publishing of Akron, Ohio, and Family Films/Family Filmstrips of Hollywood, California. They convey their detailed specifications for illustrations, and their close review of Grider’s work and editorial suggestions reflect some of the cultural biases of the time. For example, in 1951 Rand McNally cautions against use of skin tones that look too dark, and in 1960 the comments of Family Films on Grider’s sketches for the filmstrip “We Go to Church” are highly sensitive to the tastes of a broad religious audience. Also included is correspondence relating to an invitation to Grider to appear on the popular 1950s children's television program Ding Dong School.

Box 1, Folder 6 contains similar personal and professional correspondence, including a 1968 letter pointing out an error in the illustrations for Rand McNally's A Moth is Born; letters regarding Grider's work for the U.S. Playing Card Company; and a charming fan letter from a mother in Texas. Also of interest, given its earlier admonition against dark skin tones, is Rand McNally's 1970 request to have a "sprinkling of the other races introduced: perhaps a Negro, Oriental, Puerto Rican" in a new book project.

Correspondence in Box 1, Folder 7 includes materials relating to appreciation of Grider by her home town and particularly by WKU's Kentucky Museum, which collected and exhibited her work.

Undated correspondence in Box 1, Folder 8 includes notes and cards from friends, a birthday card from her parents with an affectionate message, and verses from a co-resident of the Three Arts Club in New York.

Box 1, Folders 9-11 contain particular items of correspondence: Grider's letter to Bowling Green friends Herman and Emma Lowe, which includes color slides of her at work (Folder 9); letters to Grider from children thanking her for classroom visits and praising her books, especially The Little Ballerina (Folder 10); and notes written by Grider using greeting cards that she has illustrated, sometimes with comments on the designs and her other work (Folder 11).

Box 1, Folder 12 contains correspondence, photographs and an obituary for Bucks County, Pennsylvania artist Faye S. Badura.

Box 1, Folders 13-14 contain Grider's miscellaneous papers. Material relating to various exhibits of her work (Folder 13) includes notices, lists, programs and guest books. Professional papers (Folder 14) include educational records and notes, teaching certificates, a 1946 contract for illustrations, a resume, and an early log of her work and research.

Box 1, Folder 15 contains a DVD of Dorothy Grider: Her words, her work, a 13-minute production by Art in Motion featuring comments by Grider about her career and examples of her work.

The remainder of Box 1 (Folders 16-21) consists of Grider's designs and sketches for greeting cards (primarily Christmas cards) and invitations.

Box 2, Folder 1 contains small color images of the covers of 70 published books illustrated by Grider. Boxes 2-4 contain her creative work relating to various children's books (stories, coloring, paper dolls, etc.) and filmstrips. Material differs for each work, but may include rough sketches and drafts, preliminary and finished artwork, proofs, text and mockups.

Box 5 contains a variety of drawings and sketches by Grider, primarily of animals and children but also including nature, structures, ornamentation, and fashion. Many relate to her children's books, but some are studies or other commercial artwork.

Box 6 contains sketches, finished artwork and mockups of playing card designs by Grider.

Boxes 7 and 8 contain miscellaneous artwork by Grider, prepared mostly for children's books.
