BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Harry Lucellus Jackson, the sixth of ten children of Mayme Eunice (Neel) Jackson and William Alonzo "Lon" Jackson, was born near Plano, Warren County, Kentucky on 23 January 1907. In 1918, the family moved to Bowling Green, where Harry attended local schools. He briefly attended Western Kentucky State Teachers College (now WKU) before moving to Detroit, Michigan with his sister Sallie after the two resolved to find jobs to ease the financial burden on their father. In Detroit, Jackson worked in the decorating department of the J. L. Hudson Company (1927-1929) and took art classes at the Wicker School of Art. He then worked at the Bon Ton Department store in York, Pennsylvania (1927-1931) and continued art studies at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1931, he attended a summer session at the Reimann School of Design in Berlin, Germany. Returning to the United States, Jackson worked in New York as the Art Director for Vogue magazine (1932-1934). He was an art teacher (1934-1936) for the New York Works Progress Administration (WPA) and art supervisor (1936-1939) for the New York Public School system. While in New York, he studied composition and drawing at the Art Students League and pursued work as a freelance critic. In 1939, Jackson returned to his home state and for two years was the State Supervisor of Arts and Crafts for the WPA in Kentucky.

From 1934-1939, Jackson served in the 107th Infantry Regiment, New York National Guard (Old New York Seventh Regiment) and was commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant in the U. S. Army Reserves. He joined the Kentucky National Guard's 149th Infantry in 1941; the unit was soon called to active duty and in 1942 Jackson was assigned to Camp Shelby, Mississippi. As a member of the camp's public relations staff, he participated in the production of "A Salute from Shelby," an all-soldier radio program transmitted to Louisville station WHAS for broadcast across the country. After the U.S. entered World War II, Jackson embarked upon further military training, graduating in August 1942 from Officers' Candidate School in Fort Benning, Georgia, and attending Special Services School at Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virginia. Jackson was reassigned to the 120th Infantry Regiment of the 30th Infantry Division at Fort Jackson, South Carolina and Fort Blanding, Florida where, as a special services officer, his duties included organizing recreation and entertainment for the regiment.

The 120th Infantry, with now-Captain Harry Jackson, left for training in England in February 1944. On June 11, 1944, five days after D-Day, Jackson and his staff landed on Utah Beach at Normandy. Moving inland, they remained in France for three months, then proceeded into Germany via Belgium and the Netherlands. As the war neared its end, Jackson and his staff were busy with many tasks beyond the organization of recreational facilities, including operating the post exchange; delivering and collecting ballots for the 1944 presidential election; composing press releases and a regimental history; and preparing applications for decorations. They were also enlisted to assist in the burial of war dead and to care for the masses of displaced persons and prisoners of war. Jackson was awarded the Bronze Star in January 1945. His other decorations included the Croix de Guerre and the Belgian Fourragère.

After V-E Day, Jackson served occupation duty in Germany and took libraries and language courses in Paris and Grenoble, France. Reassigned to the 76th Division in July 1945 and subsequently to the 79th Division, he returned to the United States in November 1945. Discharged from active duty early in 1946 with the rank of Major, Jackson remained in the U.S. Army Officers' Reserve Corps until 1953. He continued to work in special services, recreation and public relations at Outwood Veterans Hospital near Dawson Springs, Kentucky (1946-1947), and at a veterans hospital near Brecksville, Ohio (1947-1951). In January 1952, Jackson became Director of Public Relations for the Lubrizol Corporation, a maker of specialty chemicals and lubricants in Cleveland, Ohio. On 20 February 1952 he married Evelyn Pearson Minshall, the daughter of Cleveland lawyer William E. Minshall and the sister of Congressman William E. Minshall, Jr.

Jackson's role as President of the Lubrizol Foundation (1965-1972) led his involvement with many community boards, colleges, and local and national arts and cultural organizations such as the Cleveland Museum of Art; the Cleveland Museum of Natural History; the Cleveland Society for the Blind; the Cleveland Institute of Music; the Western Reserve Historical Society; the Boy Scouts; the National Council on Philanthropy; the J. P. Morgan Library; and the Presidential Advisory Board, Commission for the Arts, John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Jackson was active in local Republican committees and several Cleveland clubs, an avid collector of art, books, and antiques, and an admired host. He and Evelyn were popular presences in the city's social, cultural and philanthropic circles.

Diagnosed with bone cancer in December 1966, Evelyn died on 23 February 1969. Jackson retired from Lubrizol in February 1972, and in 1977 he moved back to Bowling Green, Kentucky, where he gave his expertise and support to the area's arts and cultural organizations. Harry Jackson died on 30 June 1985 and is interred in Bowling Green's Fairview Cemetery.

COLLECTION NOTE

This collection consists of the correspondence and papers of Harry L. Jackson and his family. The collection can be divided into four main sections:

- Jackson's military correspondence, papers and photograph albums (Boxes 1-4);
- Jackson's post-military correspondence and papers, both personal and professional (Boxes 5-13);
- Genealogical research on the Jackson and related families (Boxes 14-15); and
- Papers and photographs of Jackson's wife Evelyn's family, the Minshalls (Boxes 16-18).

Boxes 1-4 document in detail Jackson's military career, beginning with his National Guard service and continuing through his service in World War II and in the U.S Army Reserve, including his work in Special Services at two veterans' hospitals after the war. Of particular value in this collection (Boxes 2 and 4) is Jackson's correspondence with family, friends and fellow soldiers during World War II, and albums of his photographs made during his tour of Europe. In letters to his sister Sallie Doud and her husband in Detroit, Michigan (Box 2, Folder 2), and to his parents (Box 2, Folder 7) and sisters Bernice Jackson (Box 2, Folder 6) and Juanita Durbin (Box 2, Folder 11) in Bowling Green, Jackson vividly describes his work and conditions in England, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Germany. He details the plight of civilians, with whom he frequently interacts, and of refugees; the bombings and destruction; German atrocities and his hatred of the Nazis; and the contrast between the charm and beauty of Europe and the physical and mental horrors of "total war." His artistic training is evident in the well-executed sketches of castles, cathedrals, chateaus, and other features of European life that adorn some of the letters. He mails home souvenirs, including currency, jewelry and cigars; he also refers to a captured German flag (Box 2, Folder 6) for sister Bernice to display in the dress store in which she works. Jackson also maintains a warm correspondence with friends he makes in connection with his service in England and the Netherlands. Letters from British friends, including Captain Ivor Stewart-Liberty and his daughter Susan Cowdy (Box 2, Folders 8-10) illuminate life on the English home front both during and after the war, as do letters from the Bergstein family in the Netherlands (Box 2, Folder 12). Jackson's letters from Grenoble, France, where he obtains leave to study after VE Day (Box 2, Folders 2, 6), paint a detailed portrait of his surroundings. Also of interest is a poem Jackson was inspired to write after finding a photograph of a young Nazi soldier (Box 2, Folder 2), and his March 1945 application (Box 1, Folder 5) to marry Frances Perret, an American woman working in Europe whom he had known for several years; the marriage never took place, he later claimed, because the Army withheld permission (Box 2, Folder 5). Jackson's photograph albums (Box 4) include postcard images from Europe as well as many photographs of friends, fellow soldiers, buildings, streetscapes, and scenes of destruction; he made a few small snapshots of the Buchenwald concentration camp (Box 2, Folder 2 and Box 4, Folder 6).

Boxes 5-13 contain Jackson's general personal and professional correspondence, almost all created after he returned to the United States following World War II. It shows him developing a wide range of personal interests, friends and colleagues as he joins the Lubrizol Corporation, marries, travels around the world, and becomes involved in many church, social, cultural and philanthropic pursuits. He maintains contact with some of his fellow Army friends, corresponds with siblings, nieces and nephews and with wife Evelyn's family and friends, and becomes involved in state and local Republican politics. He pursues his interest in collecting books, art and antiques, gives lectures from time to time, and receives many notes of appreciation for various kindnesses and for hosting parties and receptions. After Evelyn's death, he receives many condolence letters, most of which are collected separately (Box 16, Folder 2). In 1965, Jackson begins a lengthy correspondence with Mahendra "Max" Chinai, a graduate of an Ohio college and a Bombay, India businessman; both Max and his family write him affectionately over the years. In 1969, while in India, Jackson meets a young Indian man, Melville O'Connor, who is anxious to come to the United States. In 1970, after Jackson purchases a large home at Bratenahl on Lake Erie, Melville comes to live with him, study, and find a suitable profession. A lengthy correspondence ensues with Melville's parents in India, who respond to Jackson's reports on Melville with news of their lives and the political situation in their homeland. Melville himself also writes frequently after he departs in 1973, his marriage to an American woman at an end, and searches for a suitable place to emigrate, finally remarrying and settling in Ireland. Also of interest are letters of Jackson's nephew, William B. "Bernard" Durbin (Box 6, Folder 6; Box 7, Folder 1) after he arrives in Southeast Asia in 1964 as an adviser to the Vietnamese Army. After Jackson retires and moves to Bowling Green, his correspondence reflects his continuing interest in travel, society, arts and cultural organizations and in Western Kentucky University; he makes numerous gifts to WKU and also serves as an adjunct professor.

Boxes 14-15 contain mostly genealogical research and related correspondence, much of which formed the basis of Jackson's book Some Descendants of John and Elizabeth Cummins Jackson in Kentucky. Some original family records are included, particularly papers of the Barnett family (Box 15, Folder 3).

Box 16 contains materials relating to the family of Jackson's wife, Evelyn Pearson Minshall. Of particular interest (Folder 6) are Civil War letters of Evelyn's grandfather Thaddeus A. Minshall, who saw service in Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia with the 33rd Ohio Infantry. Like Harry Jackson many years later, he mourns the destructiveness of war. He also reports on the outcome of battles at Chattanooga, Tennessee and Resaca, Georgia, and describes in some detail the execution of a man near Murfreesboro, Tennessee for his role in the murder of "an old Union man near Nashville." A letter from Evelyn's father William E. Minshall (Folder 7) appears to relate to his arrival at a large camp (probably Camp Alger in Virginia) during the Spanish-American War; later in life, as mayor of East Cleveland, Minshall corresponds with John D. Rockefeller about acquiring a tract of land for a hospital.

Papers of Evelyn's aunt India Minshall (Boxes 17-18) include information about the creation of her prestigious collection of Imperial Russian art objects. Her collecting began about 1934 with a visit to New York's Hammer Galleries, where she met Victor Hammer and Prince Mikhail Goundoroff and developed ongoing relationships with them. A shared interest in Russian art also appears to have led to a warm friendship between India and Hollywood fashion and costume designer Howard Greer. The bulk of her papers in this collection are letters written to her by Greer from 1957-1965 (Box 17, Folders 5-8; Box 18, Folders 1-6). Greer is a lively correspondent, sending long, mostly typed letters full of entertaining gossip, stories and witty observations. He writes of his work and home life, reading, friends, travel and social engagements, and supplies acid commentary about celebrities, clients and "rich people" of his acquaintance and with whom he and India share a fascination. At one of his showings, he introduces a dress called the "India M." (Box 17, Folder 7). Also included are copies of Greer's regular column in California Apparel News (Box 18, Folders 8-9), written after his retirement.
