Act asks for fair housing

By DIANE TSIMEKLES

The Bowling Green NAACP chapter has enlisted the help of students living off-campus in its fight to reduce substandard housing in Bowling Green.

The local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wants the city commission to adopt the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act (URLTA), which provides guidelines for landlords and tenants.

"This is not a racial issue," said the Rev. Ron Whitlock, vice president of the local NAACP chapter and the chairman of its housing committee. "The calls we've gotten (from those having problems) have not been from those living in subsidized housing or minorities."

Whitlock said the NAACP was involved to help everyone that may have problems with their landlords.

Because many Western students live in off-campus apartments, Whitlock said he wants students to get involved "by attending the commission meeting."

URLTA has not, however, been put on a city commission's meeting agenda because the city officials want to get more information, Mayor Patsy Sloan said.

"Under the present law there are lots of unanswered questions," said Scott Crocker executive director of Cumberland Trace Legal Services, which is working with the NAACP.

Under URLTA, "problems are addressed and answered . . . in some ways better for the tenant and in some ways better for the landlord."

URLTA requires that a lease, defining landlord and tenant responsibilities, is signed. Present law doesn't require a lease, and ambiguities exist because of that, said Crocker.

Soviet trip opens eyes, heart of senior

By ALLISON TUTT

A trip to the Soviet Union overwhelmed Bruce Cambron with mixed feelings — amazement, upliftment, but also depression.

"I didn't know what I expected when I went there," the Louisville senior said. "I was surprised in several ways," but also "depressed seeing the situation a lot of people live in."

On the flight home, Cambron rode with Soviets immigrating to the United States. "They were all crying," he said. Cambron was the first American they met. He said they hugged him and shook his hand.

These people were "in for a rude awakening," he said. They had no money and could not speak English. At an airport shop, Cambron bought a Soviet girl a stuffed animal. He said, "I never felt so rich in my life."

Yet, seeing the Soviet Union moving toward a freer society "brought a lot of promise to me," he said.

Cambron represented United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War at the International Student Conference hosted by the Soviet Union. He was one of two students representing the United States.

About 200 students from 110 countries met in Sochi to discuss student unity in dealing with global problems and better relations. The five-day conference, from Nov. 18-23, focused on solving problems through networking, "instead of competing against each other," Cambron said.

Problems with the arms race, environmental pollution and human and student rights were discussed, but no final resolutions were made.

Cambron said he was the center of attention because U.S. relations with the Soviet Union "affect almost all the countries."

Confronted by "every media person in the Soviet Union," he was asked how Americans feel about the Soviets. One reporter asked him if the Americans still had the impression of the vicious Russian bear.

"The bear is maybe looking more gentler now," Cambron said he replied. "People are thinking more of Gorbachev, who smiles a lot."

He met with the Public Relations Minister of the Military who was "really interested in what's going on here." He told Cambron about Soviet journalists walking through American barracks which displayed "big banners and pictures of American soldiers bayoneting Russian soldiers."

Cambron said, "They don't have a

Computer virus at Western wouldn't be terminal

By JIM GAINES

It's a programmer's nightmare — a long-dormant program, hidden deep within a computer's memory, suddenly springs to life and begins destroying stored data, other programs and even the basic operational systems that make a computer work.

The program — a computer virus — then duplicates itself and infiltrates any other system the computer is linked with.

It happened recently to the 6,000 computers of Arpanet, a scientific network, when Cornell University graduate student Robert Morris made a mistake.

And it could happen at Western, said Curtis Logsdon, Western's director of computer and informational services.

A computer virus is a complicated program, or set of instructions, that can lie hidden in a computer memory quietly replicating, Logsdon said. At a preset time it can come to life, erasing other programs and information and replacing them with duplicates of itself.

While stored in a computer's memory, a virus can also invade any other computer connected to it on a network. It can also be transferred to a floppy disk from an "infected" computer.

Such a program, called a virus because it reproduces itself and invades systems, is written to get around normal barriers which keep memory organized, Logsdon said.

The structure of a computer memory can be changed by a virus designed not only to take up memory space but also to destroy stored information. Even systems programs, the rules by which computers operate, can be destroyed.

"If you can change these rules, you can do anything you want to on the computer," Logsdon said, including changing the passwords that allow access to the computer.

Western's administrative computer system is an IBM 4381 Model P14 with a dual processor — really two computers linked up. Together they can store 16 megabytes, or 16 million bits of information. In the hard disk storage there is room for 12½ gigabytes, or 12½ trillion bits.

The system has never been broken into, Logsdon said, but it has not been untouched.

"There have been some instances where we've confirmed individuals have viewed data they were not authorized to," he said. "Since then, however, we've added a security system that makes that more difficult."

Western's computer system is fairly well-protected. The administrative computer is connected to KECNET, the Kentucky Higher Education Computer Network, which links all Kentucky public universities. It is safeguarded because it doesn't

King's birthday to be honored

By REBECCA FULLEN
and JENNIFER UNDERWOOD

Western made "a very large step" Friday when Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday was approved as an official university holiday, said Adrian Smoot, Associated Student Government administrative vice president.

Classes will not meet Monday, Jan. 16, to honor King, the civil rights leader assassinated April 4, 1968, who would have turned 60 on Jan. 15. The move to observe the holiday on a university level came after more than two years of debate from students, staff and the student government.

Smoot, a Frankfort junior, said he was happy and surprised to hear President Thomas Meredith had approved King's birthday as a university holiday "because we worked so hard to pass it through."

Howard Bailey, dean of Student Life, said he was "quite pleased" with Meredith's decision and that it is reflective of what other state schools, such as the universities of Louisville and Kentucky, are doing.

All state universities that haven't already celebrated the holiday will begin this year, Bailey said. "As of last summer, all schools had made that decision."

"It was the unanimous recommendation of the executive officers," said Stephen House, assistant to the president.

House said discussions on the holiday began earlier this fall.

Smoot wrote a resolution in January 1987 to make King's birthday an official university holiday. In 1986, former freshman class president Bill Schilling wrote a similar resolution which student government did not pass.

Instead, it passed what Schilling called a "watered-down version" to ring the bells in Cherry Hall to commemorate King's birthday at noon.

Schilling said the opposition argued King did not have that large of an impact and that many other political leaders' birthdays are not recognized.

Some people also debated whether a day off would be appropriate for King's birthday, Schilling said, or if there would be better ways to celebrate it.

"At the time there was not so much support," he said. In congress, "it was really a heated debate. I remember debating for 2 1/2 hours."

More organization among student lobbyists and former presidential candidate Jesse Jackson's progress could have helped the change of heart at Western, Schilling said.

King's birthday was observed as an official national holiday for the first time in 1986.

Last year at Western, more than 300 students and faculty members honored King by marching in a candlelight ceremony from the university center to Cherry Hall.

"Closing class is only part of what Western is doing to celebrate the holiday," Bailey said.

Della Elliott, coordinator of Black Student Retention, said she was also happy with Meredith's decision.

"It's great," Elliott said. "We salute him (Meredith)."

Schilling said he thought "it would create a good, positive relationship between blacks and whites" and "go a long way" in bridging the racial gap.

The holiday "recognizes the desires of the majority of students who want this," Smoot said. "And with the recent articles in the Herald about minority relations on Western's campus, I think it's a big boost to improve relations."

"And that is great."

Skywalk plans still on hold

Herald staff report

Western won't be getting a skywalk linking the dorms at the lower end of campus with Egypt Lot anytime soon, a spokesman for the state Transportation Department said.

The footbridge across University Boulevard wasn't in the six-year plan submitted earlier this year to the General Assembly, said spokesman Mark McDaniel.

"There are no plans to do anything at this time," he said from Frankfort. He said that although it wasn't in the current six-year plan doesn't mean it can't go in the next six years.

"When and if a project is approved and funds are set-up, bids can be made and construction can begin," said Lance Meredith, Bowling Green branch manager for the division of traffic.

A skywalk has been recommended as a solution to the accident problems on University Boulevard between Pearce-Ford Tower and Creason Drive.

Meredith said his department made a study of several options at the end of September 1987, and the skywalk was the most practical.

The report and its recommendations were sent to Frankfort in early October 1987, he said. "How things are funded and when they are funded" is up to the Central Division Office of Traffic in Frankfort.

Housing complex fairer than Greek Row

Although Western's plans to build a Greek Row would have helped alleviate the housing shortage, the new proposal for a housing complex will provide a fairer way to lessen the crunch.

The new plan, expected to cost about $3.8 million less than the previous proposal, calls for three dorms on the lower end of campus that would house about 360 students — Greek and independent. It replaces the year-old proposal for one 300-bed dorm and six Greek houses which would hold 240 students.

The original plan, created last year by then-President Kern Alexander, called for the houses to be built on 15th Street across from Cherry Hall. The new complex is expected to be built near Pearce-Ford Tower. Greek organizations that want to build houses across from Cherry could lease the land for about $1 a year.

Clearly this new plan, which includes all types of students, provides a less elitist atmosphere.

The design of the proposed dorms — suites with two bedrooms, a bathroom and a living room — is also a bonus. Allowing for more comfort and space, they might even be looked upon as residence halls instead of dorms.

If approved, the project is expected to be ready by fall 1991.

Under the new plan, Western can be a place for all students to call home.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Competitive care?

A recent Herald article voiced the opinion of area businesses that Western is unfairly competing in the open market. Ms. Hanne Karay, owner of Kinder Kollege, stated that Western's Campus Child Care was "not only unfair competition, but... bad policy." She further stated that the center provides services to the general public and to families "who can't pay."

Ms. Karay should be aware of the fact that Campus Child Care was initially funded for operation four years ago through a federal Head Start expansion grant. Head Start is a comprehensive, developmentally appropriate preschool program for children of low-income families. Enrollment in Head Start is therefore not based on ability to pay, but rather on inability to pay for preschool and child care services. The Campus Child Care Head Start program provides services to families who in the past have been exempted from obtaining child care services because of their financial status.

From the inception of the program, it was clear that there were also families in our community that, while not low-income, were unable to afford the cost of services provided by private, for-profit businesses such as Kinder Kollege. Campus Child Care and Western began to explore legitimate program options that would broaden the availability of services to meet the needs of this underserved population. The subsequent establishment of Campus Child Care's day care and after-school programs was an honest and laudable attempt to provide affordable community child care options. Campus Child Care remains a non-profit organization, supported by grants, in-kind contributions, modest fees and the commitment and good will of the university and its faculty, staff and students.

In all likelihood, with or without the support of Western, the program would continue to serve Bowling Green's low- and middle-income families and, in Ms. Karay's words, "compete" with the community's for-profit child care programs. It is interesting to note that the Head Start programs operated by both Campus Child Care and the Southern Kentucky Community Action Agency maintain waiting lists of families from our community which are eligible for services but which cannot be served because of limited program funds and space. To the best of my knowledge, none of the for-profit child care programs in Bowling Green offer free services to such families as part of their commitment to the community.

As a business woman, I am sure Ms. Karay is concerned that she cannot, in some ways, compete with such a program, but what she apparently fails to realize is that it is not the goal of Campus Child Care to compete with other child care providers. Its goal is simply to fulfill its commitment to the community and the university as a federally-funded human service agency. Ms. Karay's business does not suffer because it is competing with Western; it suffers because of its dependence on profit-motive. To pursue legislative intervention is to deny the right of the consumer to a free market, and to deny the right of low- and middle-income families to child care that does not force them to choose between "the jobs they need and the children they love."

Honesty alive

I left my purse in one of my classes in Grise Hall recently. I didn't realize I had until two hours later when I was in another class across campus. At that point I couldn't remember whether I had left it in my room or in the classroom in Grise. When I finally got home, my purse wasn't there. I was frantic! First I ran to Grise to see if it was still in the classroom. It wasn't. Then I went back to my room and called my teacher at his home to ask if he had seen it and picked it up by any chance. He said he hadn't and told me if anyone had found it and decided to turn it in, they would have taken it to the dean's office where the lost and found is. I don't know who that person was, but I would like to tell whoever it was that I am very thankful and appreciative of his or her honesty. Not one thing had been touched in my purse. Also, I just want to let people know that there are still honest people out there!

APPLE clarification

I was very pleased to see your article on the university A.P.P.L.E. program in the Nov. 22 issue. Continuing coverage by the Herald about A.P.P.L.E. activities and events as well as alcohol and drug issues and facts will be vital to the success of this program in reaching the campus community.

I would like, however, to clarify a few points which were incorrectly expressed in the article. The primary purpose of A.P.P.L.E. — a planned program for life enrichment — is education and prevention. Intervention, referral and treatment are important, but secondary, goals. Campus policy review and possible revision is one important goal. Clarifying channels on campus for intervention, referral and treatment along with identifying community resources is another. Training students, faculty and staff in problem recognition and intervention is another. But the major thrust of A.P.P.L.E. will be to assess the nature and extent of alcohol and drug use at WKU and design an array of educational programs throughout campus to effectively communicate the important facts and issues relating to personal decisions about alcohol and drug use. I might add that A.P.P.L.E. is neither prohibitionist nor pro-use.

The article quoted me saying, "I think there's a great deal of drug and alcohol use on campus." I did not say this. Actually, I do not know what the current situation on campus is. The purpose of the assessment study mentioned is to get a moderately accurate picture of alcohol and drug use patterns on campus, so that appropriate programs can be developed.

Glasgow nurtures its campus

By DARLA CARTER

Even in its appearance, Western Kentucky University at Glasgow harmonizes with the community. Small, modest and aging, the school calls little attention to itself as it sits in the midst of the well-kept homes surrounded by tall trees and Kentucky bluegrass that line Liberty Street.

In less than a year, Western and the Glasgow community have formed a bond not unlike that of two old friends — nurturing, embracing and supporting one another.

Since the campus opened in spring 1988, it has received about $18,000 in scholarship money from local citizens, businesses and organizations, and more than $80,000 to build a new library.

The community has "turned out at every step of the way" to support the campus "because they understand the need for quality higher education for our young people," Mayor Charles Honeycutt said. He testified before the state Council on Higher Education last spring that the area needed the Glasgow campus.

The campus continues to receive an "outpouring of both tangible and nontangible support," campus director James Heck said.

"Not only the spoken support, but people's willingness to donate money for scholarships" shows the community's enthusiasm toward the campus, Heck added.

The most recent scholarship fund donation came Nov. 16 when the

Those folks who were sitting there 75 years ago wouldn't have even dreamed it (Western) would have done that well, or they wouldn't have let it go in the first place.”

Bernard Williams

Kiwanis Club presented former Western President Dero Downing with a check for $10,000 earmarked for scholarships to the Glasgow campus.

That followed a donation of about $8,000 worth of scholarship money raised in October at the WKU Scholarship Golf Classic, which will be an annual event, Heck said. The event was sponsored by local businesses and citizens.

Local businesses and organizations are making sure that the campus will have a library in the future, too.

The Glasgow Business and Professional Woman's Club have raised about $80,000 of the $100,000 it's pledged to the Glasgow campus' library fund. A magazine rack, paint and conference rooms have also been offered.

Mayor Honeycutt calls Glasgow "the home of the beginnings of Western."

Western was founded in Glasgow as the Glasgow Normal Institute, but moved to Bowling Green "when Glasgow was unable or unwilling to (accommodate) its growth at the time," Honeycutt said.

"Those folks who were sitting there 75 years ago . . . wouldn't have even dreamed it (Western) would have done that well, or they wouldn't have let it go in the first place," said Bernard Williams, executive vice president of the Glasgow-Barren County Chamber of Commerce.

When Western left, "we felt a loss, so the community will continue to recognize the need" to support the Glasgow campus.

As director of the campus, Heck is attempting to reciprocate the support the campus has received by giving speeches to employees about the benefits of the school and conducting a leadership seminar at a manufacturing company.

In addition to its contribution to local businesses and organizations, Western at Glasgow has also been an asset to local schools as well, said Larry Lock, principal of Barren County High School.

"There are some students who wouldn't leave home but they would go to the Glasgow campus," Lock said. So "we promote the campus every chance we get."

Local NOW chapter forms, becoming 1 of 4 in Kentucky

By GINA KINSLOW

After meeting for about seven months with no recognized leader, about 30 Bowling Green women have formed a local chapter of the National Organization of Women.

The group's purpose is to "provide a network for women, a support system for women and to address feminist issues," said President Sandra Ardrey, an assistant government professor at Western.

The Bowling Green chapter is one of four NOW chapters in the state, with other chapters in Owensboro, Lexington and Jefferson County. The local group meets the second Wednesday of each month at the Western Kentucky University Credit Union on Campbell Lane.

"There are some issues in Bowling Green that we want to address . . . sexual harassment in the workplace, sexual discrimination, women's issues such as day care and sports equity," Ardrey said.

Nancy Rankin, vice president of chapter development for Kentucky NOW, said the objective of the national organization is to get more women into elective political office, to have better child care and to increase paternity leave benefits.

The Equal Rights Amendment, a long-time focus of the group, is not a dead issue, Rankin said. The amendment will be reintroduced into Congress in January.

Greeks rush for spring

Herald staff report

Those interested in going Greek will have a chance in January when fraternities and two sororities hold rush.

Natalie Bowlds, Panhellenic adviser, said the two sororities who did not make quota during fall formal rush are eligible to rush during the spring semester. The sororities are Alpha Xi Delta and Phi Mu.

Although this rush isn't as structured as formal rush, Bowlds said, the sororities must follow Panhellenic rules.

Alpha Xi Delta has not set its rush dates yet, said Robin Kinman, AZD rush chairman, but it will probably be during January.

Phi Mu will hold rush from Monday, Jan. 16, through Friday, 20, Phi Mu member Kim Senior said.

Anyone interested in rushing should contact sorority members, the junior from Haddonfield, N.J. said.

Brooks Walthall, Inter-fraternity Council adviser, said men interested in going through university-sponsored dry rush don't have to sign up to participate, but do need invitations.

Eric Raby, president of Inter-fraternity Council, said the fraternities will hold dry rush Jan. 9-20.

On Jan. 9, a Greek orientation dance will be held 6-10 p.m. in Garrett Conference Center, said Raby, a Russellville junior.

Jan. 10, 11, 12, will be rotation days, when only certain fraternities hold parties so that attend all fraternity's parties on different nights, Raby said.

Students get peace of the dance action

Six bands play for six hours

Herald staff report

Four dollars buys a lot these days. For about 150 students last Thursday, $4 bought a night of dancing, poetry and information about world peace at UCAM's "Give Peace A Dance."

Six bands—African Drumfest, Luke Warm, The Side, Park Avenue Dregs, Go-Go Surreal and Hopscootch Army—entertained the audience for about six hours at the third annual event in Garrett Ballroom.

Tommy Shriver, a member of The Side, said the event "was a good cause and a chance for us to get some exposure."

"It was also a chance to do something for what we believe in," said Shriver, a Bowling Green senior.

United Campuses To Prevent Nuclear War president Debi Melcher said the purpose of the dance was "to raise awareness of peace and justice issues and to bring the problems of the world to Western and the Bowling Green community."

Last week, UCAM had a week of education focusing on problems in South Africa, Central America and the environment.

"There are problems in this community also," said Melcher, a Lexington junior. "We want our voices heard throughout campus."

Julie Bunch, a Bowling Green senior who spent $12 on a T-shirt, pin and sticker at the dance, said, "For the price of admission, it was extremely good."

Panhellenic wants to better coordinate events

By ANN SCHLAGENHAUF

After five weeks packed with Greek activity, one sorority member described her sisters as exhausted and burned out.

During that time, Western's Greeks had Pike's Peak Week, Lambda Chi Alpha Watermelon Bust, Sigma Nu Powderpuff, Kappa Delta Shenanigans and Homecoming.

"There's something every single day that you have to do," said Debra Wredman, a Chi Omega member who was an assistant rush chairman for Panhellenic this year. Each sorority decides if it will participate in the events.

"If we could shorten them it would be a big help," said Wredman, a senior from Columbus, Ohio.

So she proposed that Panhellenic Council set up a subcommittee to advise the fraternities with their activities that involve the sororities. The resolution passed unanimously.

The committee hopes to cut the activities down to two days, and to keep activities from being scheduled right after each other.

The fraternities won't be forced to participate with the committee, Natalie Bowlds, Panhellenic adviser, said.

"It's still up to them. We can't tell them what to do," but the council hopes they do.

National organizations for the sororities have complained that Western's Greeks have too many activities, Bowlds said.

"This resolution will help with that."

The plan is not to discourage the fraternities, Wredman said. "We're working with them. We're not going against them."

She also said shorter events spread over a longer time period would improve participation.

Amy Branch, Panhellenic president before the recent election, said, "I think it's a great idea. We've needed something like that for a while."

The resolution would have the fraternities submit their event plans for approval to the committee, which would make recommendations, said Branch, a Goodlettsville senior.

"We (sororities) just think things are getting out of hand. They need to be regulated better."

Lambda Chi Alpha president Lee Thomas said his fraternity's event, the Watermelon Bust, would be no problem to shorten.

The week, which has events such as volleyball games, a scavenger hunt and a watermelon toss, now runs five days.

But Clay Broadbudd, president of Sigma Chi, which holds the Sigma Chi Derby during the spring semester, objected to the timing.

"It's kind of unfair that they bring this proposal up after it's over" for the other fraternities and before their Derby comes up, he said.

"I think it's kind of ridiculous. It's trying to stop what everyone's been doing for years and years."

The event raises money for the fraternity's charity, said Broadbudd, a Bowling Green senior. "I think they need to consider the positive effects of what we're doing."

But Broadbudd said he sees how the events take up a lot of time because they also keep fraternity members busy.

Sigma Nu treasurer Richard Bonduant said he agrees with the proposal.

"Frankly, I think it's a decent idea," the Lexington senior said.

The Sigma Nu powderpuff tournament lasts only three days, so it won't affect them as much as the fraternities with weeklong activities, Bonduant said.

"The sorority girls can't do everything," he said. "I don't blame them at all."

URLTA act could clear up rental questions

can be used for. Landlords and tenants would have to sign an agreement stating what damages existed before occupancy so the deposit couldn't be used to fix those.

Landlords now must provide 30 days notice of eviction to tenants who haven't paid their rent. Under URLTA, they gave seven days.

Theran Vincent rented an apartment his first semester at Western but commutes from Leitchfield now. He and his roommate signed a lease, but when they moved into the apartment, the manager had moved out.

They didn't know to whom to pay the rent, the junior said. A few months later the owner showed up wanting the rent, but "of course we didn't have $600 right there."

The landlord didn't charge a late fee because they didn't know where to send the rent, so they paid what they could and moved out.

"We asked, 'How could we know who to pay?'" Vincent said. "The owner said, 'That's your tough luck.'"

Whitlock said his group hopes to see "Western students get involved, because... they deserve better."

Bowling Green landlord Greg Willis is against URLTA. "It is very much in favor of the tenant," he said. "The law would make evictions take longer." Willis said he gives three days notice to tenants.

Eight Kentucky cities have adopted URLTA — Louisville, Lexington and six in Northern Kentucky.

The directors of the Louisville Apartment Association and the Lexington Apartment Association said they might testify here before the city commission to the effectiveness of URLTA. Crocker said.

The Lexington Association is sending a letter to Crocker that could be used in a commission meeting, according to Sallie Terrell, executive officer of the group.

The tenant and landlord agreement has been in effect in Lexington since 1979. Terrell said she wasn't in office when the act first passed, but "my members and Gale Lively (Louisville association director) tell me the owner-management side was really against it."

Then when the Supreme Court ruled it unconstitutional in 1983, "they fought to keep it," she said. "Everyone agreed that it (the act) was better than not having a law. It gave them guidelines."

The state Supreme Court ruled URLTA unconstitutional because it only applied to first-class cities and urban-county governments. It was re-enacted when it was rewritten to allow any city to pass the law.

"I think that the city has at present developed a wait-and-see attitude," Sloan said. The commission wants as much information as possible before it is put on a meeting of the agenda.

Commissioners B. L. Steen and Charlie Wilson opposed the act at the Nov. 1 working session. Both said they don't want government involvement between landlords and tenants.

"I understand that there's really no problem," Wilson said. "The problem I think was in subsidized housing" and now there is a committee to which subsidized housing residents can address grievances.

Commissioner Carol McIvor said the committee was still gathering information and didn't know whether to support URLTA. Commissioners Alan Palmer and Steen could not be reached for comment.

The commission wants to make sure URLTA will work for Bowling Green before they put it on the agenda, Sloan said.

While abuses are probably committed by both landlords and tenants, Sloan said, she thinks it is a "minority" that are taken advantage of.

Mary Kaye Tucker, a Springfield junior, lives in an apartment for which she signed a lease. She hasn't experienced any major problems with her landlord.

"If it's anything major (heat or plumbing), they'll take care of it without hesitation, usually," she said.

Bowling Green landlord Leroy Collier had not heard of URLTA, but "I haven't had any problems with my tenants," with whom he signs a lease.

Karla Turner also gathered information for this story.

Soviet visit leaves Cambron with hope defined enemy. They aren't trying to get people to hate the United States." Most Soviets "basically loved our country."

Communication with the Soviets and other international students was not a problem like Cambron expected.

"I thought, 'Gee, 110 people — how's anyone going to talk?'" But interpreters were supplied by the Soviet Union.

"I was really surprised at the treatment I got," Cambron said.

"We were totally left up to our own. We could do anything anywhere and everywhere." The students were even escorted around customs at the airport.

"We were really surprised how warm most Russian people were," he said. "They were interested in us and would try to speak English."

He was also surprised at the amount of American culture there. Cambron found discotheques with American music and that Pepsi-Cola was "the favorite drink of the country."

Cambron distributed books about Mohandas Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr. to the Soviets that described the peaceful civil resistance the men practiced. He said he told them to "be diplomatic but not threatening."

"The people bear some of the responsibility" for their problems, he said. "They still have this idea that they're going to have a savior."

He said the Soviet's biggest problem is that basic needs are looked after by the political system, but there is no personal initiative to make things better.

"It's still not completely open by a long shot," and their problems cannot change immediately, he said. Some Soviets are shocked by their new freedoms and others are worried that Gorbachev might not succeed, he said.

In Moscow, students would gather in Cambron's hotel at night to talk about the Soviet Union's problems. "We felt like we really empowered them, because when we left they were telling us 'Yeah, we feel we can do something.'"

Computer virus infection wouldn't be terminal here allow anyone to use a disk on a system computer unless the disk has been run through programs designed to detect viruses.

Also, though many on-campus computers are connected to the administrative mainframe, many of them are "dumb" terminals which cannot send programs into the central computer, Logsdon said.

To get a virus into the system, Logsdon said, someone would have to get on a terminal that connected with the main system.

"We've had some instances here on campus where persons have gotten unauthorized access to the academic computer system," Logsdon said.

So far Western has been protected from viruses from outside sources because the academic system has not been on any national computer networks, Logsdon said. That will change within the month as Western goes on a national system most often used by academic people.

Even if a virus invaded Western's main computer system, Logsdon said, the university would not be helpless. All critical information is copied on magnetic tapes, which are then stored in a vault in another building.

Western's academic computer has programs built into itself that can help check for viruses.

Despite the possibility of a computer virus here, the administrative department is prepared enough that a virus would only be an annoyance, not a disaster.

Logsdon said, "We've been concerned about them ever since viruses first cropped up."

Topper linebacker Russell Foster prepares to tackle Eastern Kentucky running back Tim Lester during Saturday's game.

Foster got to Lester this time, but the Colonel tailback and his teammates got the best of Western in the 41-24 blowout.

Tops hung at Hanger, lose 41-24

By TOM HERNES

RICHMOND — Eastern Kentucky University doesn't lose many home games.

Call it magic, luck or mystique, but the Colonels had strung together 21 straight wins at Hanger Field. And they owned a lifetime winning percentage of .855 on their home field.

FOOTBALL

They increased the number of straight wins to 22 Saturday after Eastern demolished Western 41-24 in the second round of the Division I-AA playoffs Saturday.

Combined with last year's 40-17 loss at Richmond, the Tops have been outscored 81-41 in their last two games at Hanger.

"We have a special feeling playing at Hanger," Colonels coach Roy Kidd said, "and our fans really support us."

The Toppers said they just lost to a superior football team, and it wouldn't have mattered where the game was played.

"They are an experienced playoff team and a very good team," Tops linebacker Mike Carberry said. "We (Western) played too tight, and when we came back it was too late."

"Eastern played an excellent game," quarterback David Armstrong said. "And I give them all the credit."

Western 'magic' stops Murray

By ANDY DENNIS

Western coach Murray Arnold said he would need a magic wand to defeat the Murray State Racers in the finals of the Western Kentucky Invitational Saturday.

But his magic turned out to be the starting backcourt of Brett McNeal and Roland Shelton.

In the Toppers' 79-75 win over the Racers, McNeal scored 22 points and dished out 10 assists while Shelton defended All-America candidate Jeff Martin.

"(McNeal) has had a lot of good games at Western Kentucky," Arnold said, "but this one certainly has to rank among the best."

McNeal was named the tournament's most valuable player. Shelton and junior center Anthony Smith made the all-tournament team.

"This is our tournament and we wanted to win," McNeal said. "We just came out and played real well." The Racers had lost only two games since Western defeated them last season in Murray.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

"That is the best winning percentage (of that period) in the United States," Arnold said. "In my book, they are a potential top-20 team."

Shelton held Martin scoreless for the first 8:39 of the game while Western ran to a 17-4 lead.

"They were playing good defense," Martin said. "They were altering my shots."

Although Martin finished with 20 points, Arnold felt Shelton's defense was commendable.

"I was very proud of the job Roland Shelton did offensively and defensively," he said. "While Martin wound up with 20 points, I think Roland played very well against him to keep him at that."

Martin had scored 34 points in the opening round against Tulsa University.

After defending Martin, Shelton was exhausted.

"My arms are hurting," he said after the game. "I just tried to contain him (Martin) as much as I could."

"I was not going to allow him to drive (to the basket). If he shot the three-pointer, I was going to have a hand in his face."

Shelton finished the game with 16 points.

Western took their 17-4 lead in the opening minutes with the help of steals by Steve Miller and McNeal and the three-point shooting of Shelton.

Murray coach Steve Newton said the early lead was tough to overcome.

"We got ourselves in a hole there," Newton said. "We may have come out a little too juiced up."

The Racers fought back to tie the game at 21, but the Toppers' defense helped contain a 43-33 halftime advantage.

During the second half, Murray unveiled a new offensive weapon — senior guard Terrence Brooks.

With Western up 66-50, Brooks went on a shooting streak, scoring 15

Roland Shelton scored a career-high 28 points to lead Western to a 88-73 victory Monday over Southern Illinois University.

After an emotional win over Murray State in the finals of the Western Kentucky Invitational, the Toppers were anything but flat.

"We got off to a great shooting start," Coach Murray Arnold said. "Roland Shelton's outstanding shooting early kept us in the game. I thought our kids played extremely well."

The Murray game apparently didn't drain the Toppers emotionally. Shelton said Western was ready for Southern Illinois.

"The championship game against Murray was great," he said, "but it just gave us the incentive to come up here and play hard on the road."

Before the game, Shelton said the team was kind of quiet.

"On the inside, we were ready to play," he said.

Arnold was proud of Shelton's performance.

"He's worked very hard to become a good basketball player at Western Kentucky," he said. "He's gone through some frustrating times. He's taken some kicks and came back to get the job done."

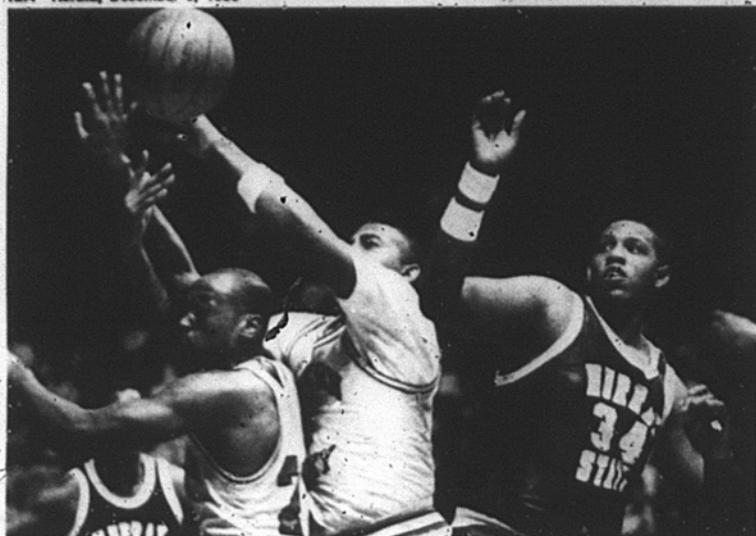

Shelton wasn't alone offensively as senior guard Brett McNeal scored 22 points and Mike Wilson netted 11.

Early in the game, Southern Illinois scored almost at will.

"We really struggled to get S.I.U. under control," Arnold said. "They were just scoring and scoring."

Southern Illinois took a 29-23 lead midway through the first half, but then Shelton canned a three-point points and bringing Murray within five points at 73-67 with 2:13 remaining.

Martin hit a three-pointer and the Racers were back in the game. "Good teams come back," Martin said. "We never did let down."

The Racers fouled in the closing minutes to get the ball, but the Hilltoppers hit their free throws to ice the game.

"When the chips were on the line, we really buried some big free throws," Arnold said.

Western reached the finals by defeating Drexel University 105-81.

The Toppers led 48-32 at the half and were never seriously threatened by the Dragons.

Senior Durey Caldwell came off the bench to score 16 points.

"I wanted to come in and give the team a lift," he said. "Fortunately I was clicking well offensively."

Cadwell's performance was timely because McNeal had an off night shooting, going five for 14 from the field.

McNeal finished the game with eight assists and five steals.

Smith and freshman Mike Wilson led scoring for Western with 17 points each. Smith also had a team-leading nine rebounds.

Drexel coach Eddie Burke said his team was a little timid.

"You might call it intimidated," he said. "When we got some shots inside, we rushed them."

Murray defeated Tulsa 86-63 in the opening round behind Martin's 34 points.

Tulsa upended Drexel in the consolation game 81-65.

Toppers give 'average performance' at meet

Herald staff report

SWIMMING

Swimming coach Bill Powell called Western's sixth-place finish at the Purdue Invitational this weekend an "average performance."

Although the Toppers finished ahead of rival Western Illinois, their overall performance in the seven-team meet was not impressive. The University of Kentucky won the meet and was followed by West Virginia, Purdue, Ohio, Illinois, Western and Western Illinois.

"We let up a little because we saw that we weren't doing too well," Powell said. "We shouldn't have done that. We should have kept at it."

Powell said the team may have been intimidated by the opposing players who were "shaved and tapered" — no body hair and at least a weeks' rest.

Powell said that shaving cuts the swimmers' times and rest makes them stronger.

"Our guys saw that and it hurt them psychologically," Powell said. "They kind of got down because they didn't think they could win."

Marty Spees was Western's best finisher in the meet as the sophomore from Fenton, Mich., placed eighth in the 100-meter backstroke with a time of 54.65. Western swimmer Mike Gonzales finished ninth in that race with a time of 54.27. The two were the only Western swimmers to finish in the top ten during the meet.

"I've got a lot of mixed emotions about this meet," Powell said. "We beat the team we were supposed to (Western Illinois), but we still should have swam better."

One of Powell's biggest complaints was the team's lack of enthusiasm.

"We needed to be psyched," Powell said. "Spirit is important whether you're winning or losing. The team needs to keep trying."

Powell was pleased, however, that some swimmers had personal best times. Powell said that is something positive to build on for future meets.

"A lot of our swimmers had good times," he said. "But we should have good times because we were swimming in a fast pool."

Western's next meet is Friday in Diddle Arena against the University of Indianapolis at 5 p.m.

"We came out shooting well in the second half," Arnold said.

Arnold was pleased with the bench.

"All in all, I thought we had some guys come in and make some big contributions," Arnold said. "Caddwell did. Peets did. I thought Birdsong gave us a nice lift coming off the bench. They made some big contributions when we needed them."

Arnold was concerned with the size of Southern Illinois coming into the game.

Lady Toppers get revenge from Southern Illinois

By DOUG TATUM

The Lady Toppers were out for revenge in Sunday's game against Southern Illinois University.

The Salukis from Illinois had beaten them two years in a row. Last year in Carbondale, Coach Cindy Scott's team blew out Western 76-58.

On Sunday senior guard Susie Starks provided that revenge as she knocked out Southern Illinois with her shooting as Western cruised to a 80-59 win. The victory left the Lady Toppers 4-0 with one more game to play in their five-game joust.

Starks scored 28 points on 11-17 shooting to break her career scoring record of 21 points set last year against the University of Alabama at Birmingham and Old Dominion.

"I was mentally into it," Starks said. "I came out ready to play."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Coach Paul Sanderford said Starks had an outstanding game and didn't force her playing. "he let the game come to her."

Starks also broke her record of field goals made and tied her three-pointer record with three. Besides her scoring, the five-foot-10 Scottsville native pulled down four rebounds, handed out three assists and had three steals.

The win gave Sanderford a 4-3 advantage over Southern Illinois. "It meant a lot to me," Sanderford said. "Cindy Scott and Southern Illinois has given me a tough time. Today we got one back on the win column."

Western's win in Diddle Arena in front of 2,300 people tied the series at five apiece.

The Lady Toppers' pressure defense forced Southern Illinois (0-3) into 28 turnovers.

"It was an adventure every time we came down the floor," Scott said. "Western flat outplayed us."

Contributing to the Salukis' problems was the absence of point guard Colleen Heimstead, who injured her ankle in practice Saturday.

Southern Illinois started out strong, grabbing a 6-1 early lead. But the Lady Toppers fought their way back behind the play of Starks and junior forward Tandrea Green to take an 18-13 lead with 11:24 left in the first half.

Green scored nine of her 12 points in the first half, and Starks tossed in 10 points before intermission.

Western had its biggest lead of the half when junior center Michelle Clark made a layup to give the Lady Toppers a 25-15 advantage. Clark finished the game with six points.

The Salukis made a 4-0 run to reduce the Lady Toppers' lead to six. Then the teams traded baskets until halftime, with Western leading 33-25.

Although the Lady Toppers had the lead at halftime, they were out-rebounded by the taller Salukis 21-19. They tied for the game with 41 rebounds each.

"Our defense and rebounding have been our constants," Sanderford said. "But we didn't rebound at all."

Western barely needed to rebound in the second half as the Lady Toppers made 51 percent of their shots, 67 percent from the three-point line. Starks was 3 for 4 from the three-point line, and freshman Len Nobert was 1 for 1.

The second half was all Western. The Lady Toppers went on an 18-7 run to take a 53-32 lead and never looked back as their lead swelled to 28.

Southern Illinois made the final score closer with the three-point shooting of guards Deanna Sanders and Karrie Redeker. The two hit four three-pointers in the last four minutes of the game as Western went to a zone for the first time in the game.

"I was trying to be generous," Sanderford said. The Lady Toppers usually play man-to-man.

Sanders led Southern Illinois with 12 points, all three-pointers. Redeker finished the game with 11 points.

The Lady Toppers play again Thursday at 5 p.m. in Diddle Arena against Austin Peay State University in the opening game of a double-header. The men's team plays the University of Louisville at 8 p.m.

Colonel passing breaks back of Toppers in loss

The Eastern that showed up Saturday sharply contrasted the one that lost 16-14 to the Toppers on Sept. 24.

Mixing a championship-caliber running attack with some timely passes by quarterback Lorenzo Fields, the 11-2 Colonels halted 9-4 Western after a competitive opening half.

Elroy Harris and Tim Lester, both 1,000-yard rushers, combined for 255 yards and Harris scored four touchdowns.

"We did everything we had to do to win the game," said Harris, a junior from Maitland, Fla. "I wanted to be more successful than the first time we played them this year."

However, it was the infrequent but effective Colonel passing that broke the Toppers' back.

Fields completed six passes in only eight attempts for 80 yards.

On the opening series of the game, the Hilltoppers forced Eastern into third down and eight yards. Fields completed a 17-yard pass to tight-end Oscar Angulo for the first down, and eight plays later Harris scored to put Eastern ahead 7-0.

After that the Tops struck back with 10 unanswered points for their only lead, 10-7.

Then Fields saved the Colonels again.

Committee may submit report on December 13

Herald staff report.

Interviews were to be completed today in an investigation of allegations that eight former basketball players improperly received gifts and money while playing at Western.

Dr. Stephen House, assistant to the president and spokesman for the investigating committee, said yesterday the committee hopes to submit a report to President Thomas Meredith by Dec. 13 for review during the holidays.

Kenny Ellis, Kurk Lee, Fred Tisdale, Tony Roberts, Michael Rutledge, Darnell Phillips, Mike Smith and Peroy White were quoted in the Aug. 6 issue of The Courier-Journal

Needing 13 yards for a first down, Fields completed a 19-yard pass to flanker Randy Boehler to keep the drive alive. Eastern scored and never trailed again.

Fields' last big throw was a 25-yard touchdown pass to Boehler, giving Eastern a 21-10 lead.

"In the second quarter we didn't execute and they stuck it in the endzone," Coach Dave Roberts said.

Taking advantage of Western punter Todd Davis having to kick into 25 mph wind in the third quarter, Eastern had to drive only 41, 18 and six yards for 17 more points.

Western didn't fold. Touchdown runs of three yards by quarterback David Armstrong and 75 yards by tailback Joe Arnold finished the scoring and the Tops' season.

Arnold finished his career at Western with a 141-yard effort and the all time Western rushing leader. The senior from Decatur, Ga., tallied 3,570 rushing yards passing former leader Dickie Moore who had 3,560.

While the rest of the Toppers couldn't match Arnold's performance Saturday against Eastern, the season should still be counted as a success, Roberts said.

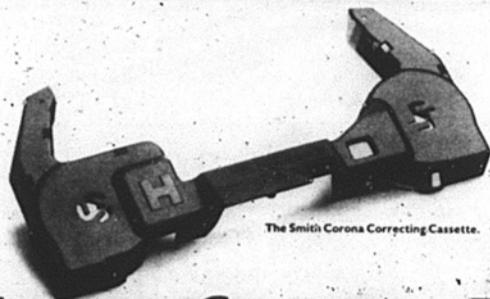

"It was a great season," he said. "We were one of only five Western teams that won nine or more games in a season."

saying they received improper aid while Clem Haskins was head coach and Don Evans was assistant coach.

The newspaper reported that players said they received gifts — including $5 loans, payments of more than $100, free transportation home and suits between 1981 and 1986.

The six-member committee appointed by Meredith in August will finish its investigation by interviewing one of the coaches today, House said. The players were interviewed earlier.

The NCAA will not review allegations at Western until the report has been submitted, said David Bersi, assistant executive director of enforcement.

Past student presidents reflect on their terms

By TANYA BRICKING

Looking back on their terms as Associated Student Government presidents, two Western graduates have examined the strengths and weaknesses of student government and their attempts to be the liaison between the administration and the students.

Tim Todd, a 1988 graduate who now works in Richmond, was student government president from spring 1986 through spring 1988.

He credits much of his success as president to former university president Dr. Kern Alexander, a man he said he respects.

"I was fortunate to come in at a time when the president (Alexander) was very student-oriented."

Todd said students have "a lot of impact at Western depending on who the president is." He said Alexander's "open-door policy" helped create a good relationship between the students and the administration.

According to Todd, Alexander was instrumental in creating the student hangout, Nitelclass, which opened last November, and in getting the administration to grant $10,000 to improve the campus lighting system.

Todd said his major problem as student government president was dealing with the Herald, with which he said he had a bad relationship concerning "negative coverage."

"I grew up a lot in those two years," Todd said. "It helped me understand people more and opened my eyes to the feelings of others."

His words of wisdom for current president Scott Whitehouse were "to get along with people, keep the students' interests in mind and always smile."

Todd said he has considered a future in politics, but is focusing on "getting established in the business world" and perhaps eventually getting into Kentucky politics.

Mitchell McKinney, a 1986 graduate, is a graduate student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and was student government president during the 1985-86 school year.

"Serving as president helped me a great deal to define my interests," McKinney said. "I really started to see that the university career life is the type of life I might enjoy."

"When I came to Western I saw things I wanted to improve," he said. "I wanted to help students be more involved and be heard."

Western's student government celebrated its 20th anniversary the year McKinney was president. It was also the first year it hosted the State Government Conference, a workshop for student governments from across the state. Before that, Western "had no contact with other student governments in Kentucky," he said.

During his presidency, the university added a pedestrian light and signs between Pearce-Ford Tower and Egypt parking lot.

Student government voiced the need to extend library hours from 7:45 a.m. to 3:45 a.m. during the weekend before the week-of final exams. Sunday through Thursday regular hours were also extended from 11 p.m. to midnight.

"That year we also got involved with a rally in Frankfort for Kentucky higher education," McKinney said. "We were involved heavily on the state level."

McKinney took part in the search for then-President Kern Alexander after former president Dr. Donald Zacharias left in August 1985. He introduced Alexander to student organizations.

McKinney said he considers himself "fortunate to have been able to work with several great administrators," including Zacharias and Alexander.

"Serving in that position, I learned as much, if not more, than I learned in my classes," McKinney said. "It was more or less a laboratory experience for me."

Stimulants can have side effects

By DIANE TSIMEKLES

To many students, sleep is a privilege — one which they don't get enough of. So finding a way to stay awake in class, at work and while studying at home can be a problem.

When Missy Patterson, a Nashville junior, took Vivarin, the pills kept her awake. But that's about it. "I could read my notes fast," she said, "but I didn't retain any of it."

Vivarin is one of many over-the-counter stimulants that keep over-worked and under-prepared students conscious during the school year, especially around mid-terms and finals.

Amanda Davis, a sophomore from Brentwood, Tenn., said she sometimes relies on Vivarin to keep her awake so she can study or go to class.

"It depends on how tired I am at night," she said, "if I have a test the next day." She said she does take it sometimes in the mornings, though she doesn't take it every day.

The active ingredient in Vivarin tablets is stimulin, a registered trademark for caffeine. Beecham Products, the tablets' manufacturer, claims on the package that its product contains the same amount of caffeine as two cups of coffee and is "as safe as coffee."

Another non-prescription stimulant is Caffeidine. These capsules are time-released and the package claims they "perk you up fast."

Pep-Back is touted as an "energy-booster" and contains Eleveine, the Alvo-Anco Pharmaceutical Cos., Inc. trade name for caffeine anhydrous.

No-Doz is another stimulant product that, like Vivarin, is advertised as "safe as coffee." It contains 100 milligrams of caffeine per tablet.

The major side effects of using these products are nervousness and jitters, said Jane Brown, pharmacist at Osco Drugs.

The products contain "concentrated caffeine, and it is hard on the stomach," she said.

Side effects aren't that serious, Brown said. Users could suffer from "possibly ulcers, but that would have to be (from) a prolonged use of it."
