SGA president details harassment
Student Government Association President Andi Dahmer has been facing harassing behavior. Over the course of the fall 2017 semester and this spring, Dahmer contended that several members of SGA had cursed at her in her office, called her derogatory names and had anonymously exchanged group messages with each other wishing her physical harm. All this resulted in her feeling unsafe on campus.
“They knew what dorm that I stayed in,” Dahmer said. “They knew where I parked my car and they had identified my car and so they could find me. I think that was the scariest part. That’s when I really started fearing for my life on this campus.”
Dahmer explained this behavior toward her had been taking place both inside and outside the SGA Senate chambers for several months.

Former faculty regent starts institution
A new center focused on retention, graduation and overall student success held its grand opening Monday. The Kelly M. Burch Institute for Transformative Practices in Higher Education, named in honor of the late daughter of provost emerita Barbara Burch, will work with faculty, staff and administration to incubate and implement new ideas. Burch said the idea for the institute began as a way to both celebrate her daughter, who died in 2015, and to benefit WKU.

Lady Topper tennis connects in their diversity
The 2018 WKU tennis team featured six players from six different countries: Greece, Belarus, Japan, Finland, Bolivia and Paraguay.
Members of the tennis team were recruited to WKU by head coach Jonatan Berhane, and they all traveled similar paths to Bowling Green. They decided to leave their home countries in order to attend college in the United States, which graduate student Elpida Malamou said many international players do if they want to pursue education while still furthering their tennis career.

A slice to savor: Breakfast is your best bet
Starting the day with breakfast is easily the best way to set yourself up for success before you even walk out your door. Whether you’re hitting the gym before a busy day at work or if you’ve got four exams ahead of you, fueling up with the right combination of breakfast foods will help you tackle any agenda.
Building the perfect breakfast is not rocket science. It’s simply pairing a food that happens to digest somewhat quicker, for that quick burst of energy we all need first thing in the morning, with a more filling food that will stick with you for a tad longer.
