and give someone the power to leave a negative situation," said Cole.

Members of Iota Phi Theta, Ernest Simmons (not pictured) and Ihyauszz Cole, speak at Love the Way You Lie in the Downing Student Union auditorium, on Tuesday: Cole is a sophomore at WKU and is majoring in psychology. "I'm really against sexual assault. Nobody should do any type of abuse, so I want to be the positive person and influence that can make a difference and give someone the power to leave a negative situation," said Cole.

Music, poetry, videos and skits combined to present a narrative raising awareness against sexual assault and domestic violence for WKU's third annual Love the Way You Lie presentation.

"Many times sexual assault is something that we're so speechless about, that we don't talk about and that we don't communicate about," Lauren Cunningham, community engagement coordinator at the ALIVE Center, said during the event's opening remarks.

"But tonight is a night where we use our art to be advocates." Throughout Tuesday night's presentation, students, faculty and staff participated in a series of performances in the Downing Student Union auditorium.

The event is a part of Sexual Assault Awareness Month, which lasts throughout March in Kentucky. Campus and community organizations work together to coordinate relevant events, said Audrey Spaulding, the communications and marketing coordinator for the ALIVE Center for Community Partnerships.

"I think what really sets Love the Way You Lie apart from some of the other events we have this month is that individuals who come and view this event will be able to visually see what sexual assault can look like," Spaulding said. "It encourages conversation and shares resources.

Cunningham not only moderated the event, she also performed two songs with accompaniment from Bobby Poine.

"Many times, the misconception is that this is a women's issue. But it's not. It's our issue," Cunningham said. "And one of the goals of this program was to bring all genders together to stand up against sexual assault." See Awareness Page A3

REACH Week encourages student creativity

BY JESSICA VOORHEES

WKU will use this week to showcase student research, scholarship and creative achievements through Research Experiences and Creative Heights, REACH Week.

REACH Week began Monday with a kick-off reception, faculty forum and student poster competition.

Lynn Minion, manager of marketing and business development, said judges evaluated students on their posters, which showcased their research pictorially.

Fourteen student presenters displayed their work at the Posters-at-the-Capital undergraduate research convention in February. Their projects will be displayed on the second floor of Downing Student Union on Saturday at the Student Research Conference.

Students also attended a speaker event on Wednesday, evening presented by the College of Education and Behavioral Sciences.

Frank Encorso, inventor of the nicotine patch, spoke to students in the Bansell Hall Auditorium.

More budgeted for landlines than needed

BY TANNER COLE

WKU has about $14,000 budgeted for long-distance phone calls in the 2014-2015 academic year, but only spent about $8,000, resulting in an approximate $5,000 difference.

The decline of long-distance calling is a success story, and its origins stem largely from use of cellphones and similar technology.

Long-distance phone calls are a simple line item on each department's annual budget. In the past 10 years, the total amount of all those line items dramatically decreased. In 2004, WKU spent about $150,000 on long-distance calls. That number has dropped by over $60,000, according to data provided by Director of Communication Technologies Greg Sumpter.

"That [$50,000] is a big number no doubt," Sumpter said. "But this place is the size of a city."

Funding comes from plenty of places and WKU employees can't really adjust to changes, including things such as grant money. When looking at the unrestricted funds, the amount WKU is choosing to spend on long-distance calls is $20,964.77 according to Senior Vice President for Finance and Administration John Mead.

"Those of us with cellphones are more than happy to pay our cellphones than to use our desktops," Mead said. But after a decade of declining costs, the budget still only reflects about $10,000 of that shift. Spread out over hundreds of departments is about $50,000 budgeted for a cost that is continually dropping each year.

On a departmental basis, the declining cost of long-distance calls isn't much, but when looked at on an aggregate level, these differences start to add up.

Grad student looks to honor sister

Elizabeth Madariaga, the sexual assault survivor who graduated from WKU in May, says she's feeling the love from her classmates and school administration.

"I know we've had some rough times, but I think with the students and the professors who I work with, we're having a lot of fun," Madariaga said in an interview with the WKU Herald in early June.

"I feel like I'm learning a lot, and I'm having a lot of fun," she added.

"I'm excited about the future," she said.

The WKU Herald is a student-run newspaper. It is the official publication of the Western Kentucky University student government. It is printed weekly during the academic year and bi-weekly during the summer. It is available for free at all WKU campus locations and through online subscriptions.

Phone calls

"They just don't go through the process of saying that they know they're going to connect," Mead said. "That's why the dorm service is the last of its kind in the world."

"But cellphones made the service virtually obsolete. The dorm service is becoming a thing of the past," he said.

"It hurt a lot when she passed because I was a part of her life," he said.

"That's why the dorm service exists. It is what I'm most proud of," Wood said.

"The dorm service is going to have more to use for some other things," Mead said. "That's why the dorm service exists."

Can I get an “Ameni”?
I have stretched ear tics for the past six years. People have asked me why and I usually answer with a shrug or a wry smile. After all, I have a little less patience. First, I have stretched ear tics because my ears are used to being tampered with and they make up a sizable chunk of my personal identity. If you have ever seen me, you’ll notice that my ears are not just stretched, they are misshapen lumps of flesh.

The first step in resolving your stress is to notice it. This is harder than it may sound. For example, you may not notice that your stress is stopping you from eating because you are so overwhelmed or even just simply stressed. You may not be able to see your stress, and even if you can, you may not want to.

For those who ask “Why do you need this in your poor ears?” I’ll point to their face and blankly stare. I have a little less patience. First, I have stretched ear tics because my ears are used to being tampered with and they make up a sizable chunk of my personal identity. If you have ever seen me, you’ll notice that my ears are not just stretched, they are misshapen lumps of flesh.

Not hunched, definitely the back of Guthrie

BY ANDREW HENDERSON

The Guthrie Bell Tower is a staple at WKU. Students are constantly captivated by its melodic sounds, how the Roman numeral for four is incorrect on the tower’s clock face and the stoic figure that stands in front of Mass Media and Technology Hall. Yet behind every great bell tower is an even greater woman.

Paige McCord, senior from Louisville, doesn’t typically go around campus receiving congratulations for the work she does operating Guthrie Bell Tower. She said remaining a mystery and flying under the radar is a fun part of the job.

“It’s kind of like being a fly on the wall,” she said.

McCord started her job at the tower last August and will carry the legacy until she graduates. McCord received this job as part of a scholarship through the music department.

Adam said McCord first came to mind when thinking of a replacement for the tower’s operator.

“I wanted to find a student who I knew would appreciate the tradition that had been set by previous players,” said Adam in an email.

Adam said she is the only faculty member who can operate the carillon system that powers the tower. The carillon is a unique instrument that not many institutions use.

“I think, in order to succeed, you have to maintain in a lot of ways,” he said.

The Laughings showed students the cards they had to carry to prove they were American Indians, and Hawk explained that there is a blood quantum a person has to meet to be considered an American Indian by the government. Dakota Sherek, a senior from Louisville, KY, said she was approached by Victoria LaPoe, but advisor and a professor of journalism and broadcasting.

Native American foster community, knowledge

On the second floor of Mass Media and Technology Hall, students gathered around a long table, munching on pizza and sipping on soft drinks. These students are part of the Native Student Group Talking Circle, an attempt to inspire open discussion of American Indian culture and issues in a safe place. All students were welcome.

Hawk Laughing along with two sons, one of whom is an incoming freshman, attended the meeting. Hawk, a Mohawk American Indian, and Regina, a Cherokee American Indian, shared stories about experiences they’ve had, as well as how life was growing up.

However, Hawk Laughing said what they were taught while growing up didn’t always agree with other people’s views.

“People always say to me, ‘I wish you had become a lawyer or an engineer or a doctor’ and I always reply, ‘I am an artist and my job is to inspire open discussion of the things that I care about.’”

“President Ransdell has a button in his suite that peals the bells when we win. That’s why the bells go off crazy,” she said.

McCord said some songs are already put into the carillon system such as “College Heights,” the Fight Song and “My Old Kentucky Home” and are always ready to be played. She takes her creative freedom very seriously as she played “Fancy” by Iggy Azalea, “Bang” by Jessie J and some Harry Potter earlier this week.

“I’ll be playing some things and go out and people will be dancing under the bell tower, and I love it. I think it’s so much fun,” McCord said.

Having a student be at the helm of the tower is something both Adam and McCord take pride in. Adam said she believes the bell tower is a voice for the university and that’s what makes it a special thing for her.

Giving back to the university and echoes throughout the campus and the community as well.

“I play the carillon on occasion, but for a voice and sound associated with WKU, it is important that a student voice is heard,” as well, Adam said.

McComb sees her job as an opportunity to secretly give back to the university and that’s what makes it a special thing for her. Going back to the university and the students is a definite plus as McCord sits in the small room and plays.

“Being able to brighten someone’s day makes being in this junior’s closet of a little room, when I have to move the big air blower out of my way to sit down, makes it all worth it,” McCord said.

“I think it’s important, at an academic university, to celebrate all people and let them understand of all people,” she said.

Lacteria Dye, an assistant professor of counseling and student affairs, brought her class of graduate students to the meeting. Both Fox and LaPoe sent out emails to fellow faculty members and graduate students, which is how she found out.

Dye said a group like this is important because it brings light to issues people might not know about.

“Students went around the table and shared ideas about what they’d like to see in future meetings, and most students expressed their gratitude and appreciation for a group like this. Many said they wanted to learn more, and this was a great opportunity to do that night’s meeting but were eagerly anticipating the next.

‘I’ve actually received quite a few emails from people saying, ‘I couldn’t make it this time, but if you have another one, let me know!’ she said.

The next meeting of the Native Student Group Talking Circle will be March 30, and the time and location are to be announced.

creaminess to round out the sandwich. While it may not have been completely, it conveyed some strong, balanced flavors.

JD’s also makes its own pastries. One of the daily specials was the hummingbird cake, infused with banana and lined with cream cheese icing. This traditional dessert reminds one of the texture and flavor of a dense, moist banana bread. The potency of the banana verged upon overpowering, but the sweet tang of the rich frosting kept it in check. It was a pleasant take that tones well for the other pastries offered.

Pakistan student hosts understanding event

BY ANDREW HENDERSON

WKU is home to many international students who represent countries from all over the world. –China, Brazil and Saudi Arabia just to name a few. A large group of Pakistani students are trying to bring together all nationalities for the first time. Hoyng said this idea was approved two weeks ago, and they haven't gotten any complaints.

"The main idea was to connect Pakistan students with American students ever before," he said. In order to better connect these groups of students the group will be hosting a Pakistan Day event. Sadal elaborated on the significance of what Pakistan Day is. He said it is a holiday celebrated in Pakistan on March 23 which represents the creation of independent states for Muslims in British India.

"This day is just for Pakistan, but we want to be for everyone," Sadal said. "So students from all over the world will be coming here to the student association to find what the community will consist of. It will work as a formal presentation and a meal, and participants are encouraged to stay after for a social function which will include a tour of the student association." Hoyng said there will be a skit portraying the stereotypes Americans have toward Pakistanis and vice versa.

"These are the stereotypes—these are the things people want to see and hear," Sadal said. "We're still in the beginning stages so we're just getting the word out about Pakistan," Sadal said. Sadal said a prominent speaker the event will have is Shahzia Munawar who was the first Pakistani student to graduate from WKU to earn a doctorate. She said many of the Pakistani community are to be featured at the event.

Sadal said that there will be a variety of plans for movie and television performances, along with being able to ask questions.

The Pakistan Day will include keynote speakers from the student organization, the Pakistani Student Association. Sadal said the event will be held in the second week of April, and it has been submitted to the student association. Low can be found in mysterious places, even in the political atmosphere of the Student Government Association (SGA) on campus.

Nicki Taylor, Creston senior, currently serves as the chair of SGA and she never thought she'd have to defend her position come election time.

"It feels kind of like everyone else. I just talk on behalf and advocate for issues on behalf of all the students here at WKU," she said.

She also took the time to assume the role of a wife during college.

Taylor married her fiancé Travis Taylor, at the Colonnade in April 2012. Originally the two had plans for a big wedding in Muhlenberg County, but both said the process was a trying one.

"Planning for it was stressful, especially for two people in college," Travis Taylor said.

The couple said that despite their workload as students and other commitments, their marriage hasn't changed anything in regards to other activities.

"It makes us more appreciative of our relationship," Taylor said.

Nicki Taylor said he messaged her on Facebook and she couldn't believe it.

Travis Taylor admitted he didn't know how he would feel about his wife but as time went on, he realized he didn't need to be shocking for her to laugh. He believes Nicki has done an amazing job balancing school, SGA and her personal life, allowing her to excel in all of the areas.

"I believe much can be learned from Nicki in the sense that school and work and school and balancing school and SGA, and we should not sacrifice our own social life and personal aspirations—that is what is most important," Miles said in an email.

WKU Representatives at NCAA Championships

The WKU women’s swim team was represented by two athletes at the NCAA championships in Greensboro, North Carolina. Senior Susan Marquess ended her WKU career with a 1:55.8 clocking in the 200-meter butterfly, good for 22nd place in the meet and just .22 seconds shy of a spot in the finals of the event.

Sophomore Nadine Laemmler completed her first season as a Lady Topper with a trip to the NCAA championship, after joining as a freshman mid-season. Her inaugural trip yielded a 34th place finish in the 100-meter breaststroke at 1:52.25.

Schwingenschlogl will travel to Iowa City, Iowa this weekend for competition.

CSCAA National Invite

Senior TJ Bland has highlighted WKU swimming’s presence at the CSCAA National Invite in Texas thus far. Bland, who finished second at the C-USA championships in the 100-meter breaststroke behind Schwingenschlogl, won the event this weekend with a time of 55.52. Sophomores David Randburger placed sixth in the same event at 55.52.

Freshman Ryan Burcham put forward the second-most notable showing for WKU on the weekend, clocking a time of 48.53 in the 100-meter butterfly, good for second place.

Junior Chris Goodman, Bland, freshman John Smith, and junior Brennan Elsas put up a WKU record 1:53.9 in the 200-meter breaststroke at last year’s national invite, put up a WKU record 1:53.9 in the 200 breaststroke.

The men’s program is yet to compete in the NCAA championships, with sophomore All-American Fabian Schwingenschlogl entering as WKU’s only representative. He made his NCAA championship debut as a freshman last season, and finished eighth in the 100-meter breaststroke at 52.25.

Schwingenschlogl will travel to Iowa City, Iowa this weekend for competition.

Senior TJ Bland has highlighted WKU swimming’s presence at the CSCAA National Invite in Texas thus far. Bland, who finished second at the C-USA championships in the 100-meter breaststroke behind Schwingenschlogl, won the event this weekend with a time of 55.52. Sophomores David Randburger placed sixth in the same event at 55.52.

Junior Chris Goodman, Bland, freshman John Smith, and junior Brennan Elsas put up a WKU record 1:53.9 in the 200-meter breaststroke at last year’s national invite, put up a WKU record 1:53.9 in the 200 breaststroke.

The men’s program is yet to compete in the NCAA championships, with sophomore All-American Fabian Schwingenschlogl entering as WKU’s only representative. He made his NCAA championship debut as a freshman last season, and finished eighth in the 100-meter breaststroke at 52.25.

Schwingenschlogl will travel to Iowa City, Iowa this weekend for competition.

SWIMMING BRIEFS

The WKU women’s swim team was represented by two athletes at the NCAA championships in Greensboro, North Carolina. Senior Susan Marquess ended her WKU career with a 1:55.8 clocking in the 200-meter butterfly, good for 22nd place in the meet and just .22 seconds shy of a spot in the finals of the event.

Sophomore Nadine Laemmler completed her first season as a Lady Topper with a trip to the NCAA championship, after joining as a freshman mid-season. Her inaugural trip yielded a 34th place finish in the 100-meter breaststroke at 1:52.25.

Lady Tops split double-header at Lipscomb

BY HUNTER FRINT

The Lady Tops finished a double-header against Lipscomb on Tuesday, recording the first game 9-2, but falling behind in the second 3-1.

They will travel to Denver, Texas to play a three-game series this weekend.

Head Coach Amy Tudor said going into the series that the goal is to always be competitive.

"You know, we want to be competitive," Tudor said. "That's our goal every time we're playing a team. We want to go out and make sure we win."

Game One (WKU 9, Lipscomb 2)

Kramer pitched her 12th double-digit strikeout performance of the season with 16 strikeouts, allowing just three hits, four walks, and one earned run.

Pricci Conzo contributed two runs and two hits during the game, with Brooke Holloway and Kayti Hanson adding two runs each.

By the top of the sixth, the Lady Tops held a 6-1 lead after scoring five runs in the fifth inning.

In the bottom of the fifth, Lipscomb managed two stolen bases in a row. Then an error by WKU brought in their second and final run.

Game Two (WKU 3, Lipscomb 1)

Senior Janna Scheff gave up two runs on five hits in her start at the mound, with freshman Hannah Parker allowing two hits and matching Conzo's 21 strikeouts in 2.1 relief innings.

The WKU men’s track and field team was released Tuesday, awarding WKU its first ever appearance in the nation’s best, I think it is an out- standing honor, and I am glad people can see how far from an easy task.

"Competing in these more challenging meets gives us a chance to show-case every element of our program," Jenkins said. "We have to go in confident and, knowing who were representing because it gives us an opportu-nity to show our three letters just as our LSU or FSU."

The team hopes to get good compe-tition from the sprinters and throwers in three of the five “major meets” in the nation. These meets include the Flori-da Relays, Mt. SAC for the elite runners and the Penn relays—the largest meet in the country.

"Competing in these more challenging meets gives us a chance to show-case every element of our program," Jenkins said. "We have to go in confident, and knowing who were representing because it gives us an opportu-nity to show our three letters just as our LSU or FSU."

Sophomore Ventavius Sears is hoping Freshman and scoring points as a Conference Men’s Most Outstand-ing Freshman and scoring points as a NCAA qualifier in four events, sopho-more Ventavius Sears still believes he can’t do anything without his team-mates.

"When we pick each other up in the meets and practices it helps us all perform well, and I think we did well in indoor so I'm looking forward to our transition in outdoor," Sears said.
