What began as a marijuana investigation by Western Kentucky University police resulted in the arrest of a student on a forgery charge.

Police received a tip about marijuana in Keen

Hall, and upon going there they smelled the drug from outside Room 102, according to Assistant Public Safety Director Horace Johnson.

Police arrested Frederick Eldon Hass, 19, of 110 Keen Hall and David Wilson Riggs, 19, of 102 Keen Hall, who were in Room 102.

Riggs was charged with possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. Hass was charged with possession of marijuana and second degree forgery.

The forgery charged resulted from a search of Hass' room that revealed false identification cards and materials for making false identification cards, Johnson said.

H.H. Cherry was well acquainted with Barren River

3-2-84
D. N.

By W. HERMAN LOWE

Western Kentucky University's founder and first president signed himself with a flourish, "H.H. Cherry, Bowling Green, Ky." But he had a summer cottage on Barren River at Thomas Landing. When we swam or rowed a boat with him, two activities he dearly loved, we called him "Fesser Cherry."

This "bungalow," as he called it, was of wood painted red. It sat back a few feet from a 30 foot straight down dropoff to the waters edge where he kept his rowboat tied up

H.H. CHERRY signed his name with a flourish, but to his children's friends, he was 'Fesser Cherry'.

Like all of us around Thomas Landing, he loved and enjoyed Barren River, except on one short occasion. Many happy times were spent up and down the river and at "Fesser Cherry's" place.

He had steps built down to the water's edge. He and Mrs. Cherry invited the young swimmers of the neighborhood to use those steps to go down and swim and swim with his daughter, Josephine, and some of her Bowling Green friends.

To make it more attractive, we built him a wooden platform with a springboard and 10 foot diving "tower". He the cottage where many of us kept our bathing suits.

On a Sunday morning, some of us, including Josephine, about 16 years old, were enjoying using the diving tower and springboard. Josephine had permission to skip Sunday school but had to go to church later.

Dr. Cherry, though envious of us, felt he must go to Sunday school and church. But he came down to watch us for a few moments before leaving. He was all dressed up in fresh summer suit, collar and tie, Panama hat and freshly shined shoes. His youngest daughter, Elizabeth, was a little tad who could not swim, but was running around on the platform and trying to push a rock, we used for a rowboat anchor, off the corner of the platform.

She finally succeeded and ran back from it as it made a big splash.

Dr. Cherry thought it was Elizabeth who had fallen in. He yelled "E-LIZABETH!" and jumped in feet first where the rock had gone down. He came up splashing about and looking frantic. She ran over to the edge of the platform and yelled, "Here I am Daddy! Here I am!"

The expression on his face just cannot be described. His Panama hat went floating down the river. Josephine and I were bending with laughter. When he got back on the platform, he said, "You rascals would laugh at a drowning lifeguard! I ought to whale all of you!"

I thought it a good time to jump in, swim down and rescue his hat.

Back on the platform he was trying to wipe water and a smile off of his face, the smile that helped him found Western.

He thanked me for his hat, and with Elizabeth with him, he went back up the steps leaving a trail of water.

A lot of human interest tales can be told about Dr. Henry Hardin Cherry's life as Thomas Landing. Some of them had to do with the founding of Western Kentucky University.

JOSEPHINE CHERRY and her Bowling Green friends were allowed to swim in Barren River on Sunday mornings instead of going Sunday school — as long as Josephine went to church later.

The Kentucky Museum announces plans for Women's History Week

D.H. 3 2-82

Women's History Week will be celebrated at Western Kentucky University with a week of activities at the Kentucky Museum and Library March 3-6.

"Women: Builders of Communities and Dreams" will feature a lecture by a Tennessee historian on growing up in Appalachia; a lunchtime learning program on the history of the Warren County Homemakers program; a tribute to women's basketball at Western; and a series of workshops for Girl Scouts.

The celebration is sponsored by the Kentucky Library and Museum and the History Department, with support from the WKU President's and Potter College Dean's offices and the English Department. It is being coordinated by Nancy Baird, Librarian at the Kentucky Library, and Carol Crowe-Carraco, professor of history at Western.

Margaret Ripley Wolfe, a professor of history at East Tennessee State University at Kingsport, will present a program titled "Reflections of an Appalachian Historian" at 8 p.m. Monday, March 3. Dr. Wolfe, who still lives on the farm on which she grew up, will speak about her childhood experiences in Appalachia and on her philosophy of history. A public reception will be held at 7 p.m.

Dr. Wolfe is a social historian, with special interests in recent American history, urbanization and immigration, and has conducted research on the history of the South, women's history and urban topics. She is currently working on an interpretive history of Southern women which will be published as a part of the University of Kentucky's New Perspectives on the South series. Last year she was awarded the Women's History Award by Midway College.

A Lunchtime Learning program titled "Women in Community: Warren County Homemakers, 1931-56" will be given by Annie Archbold at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, March 4. Dr. Archbold is compiling the history of the University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Homemakers organization in Warren County and will present in this program her research from the first segment of the study. The project is funded by the Kentucky Oral History Commission.

Participants may bring a lunch; beverages will be provided.

An exhibit of photographs which document the history of the Homemakers will be on display at the Museum during Women's History Week. The exhibit, also a part of Dr. Archbold's project, is being prepared by Sandy Schaap, a local artist, and is funded in part by the Kentucky Humanities Council with support from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

On the eve of the Sun Belt Women's Basketball Regional Finals in Bowling Green, Ms. Baird and Dr. Crowe-Carraco will give a program titled "The Net Effect: Lady Toppers Tribute." The program, scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday, March 4, will highlight the history of women's basketball at Western beginning at the turn of the century. State law ended inter-collegiate basketball for women in the thirties and the game did not resume for over 40 years. The Lady Toppers started playing again in 1973.

Members of some of the early teams and some current Lady Toppers will also be on hand for the program, and an exhibit of photographs and memorabilia will be on display.

Workshops for Girl Scout Junior and Cadette troops will be Tuesday through Thursday, March 4-6. The workshops, which will help the Scouts fulfill requirements for the Local Lore badge, will be held immediately after school for an hour and will be taught by Dianne Watkins, Education Curator for the Kentucky Museum, Ms. Baird and Dr. Crowe-Carraco.

Troops should contact the Kentucky Museum to preregister.

THE CALVERT SISTERS play in their back yard on Park Street around the turn of the century. They were the children of Thomas and Margaret Younglove Calvert. This picture is among those selected for exhibition during Women's History Week at the Kentucky Museum. Exhibits will include "Women in Community: Warren County Homemakers 1931-1956", part of the documentation for Dr. Annie Archbold's project on the history of the Warren County Homemakers, mounted by Bowling Green artist Sandra Schaap. This organization provided educational services to rural women during the Depression, and made real changes in the county economy. D.V. 3-2-86

Women had been hidden in history

By CAROL CROWE-CARRACO

Some forty years ago historian Mary R. Beard, with amazing ability to foresee the new social history trends of the seventies and eighties, noted: "The dogma of woman's complete subjection to men must be rated as one of the most fantastic myths ever created by the human mind."

She might also have added that for eons females, unless unusually saintly or lascivious, have been traditionally "hidden in history," always there but rarely mentioned. Myths and legends so long in existence cannot be eliminated overnight and need organized assistance if they are to be reshaped.

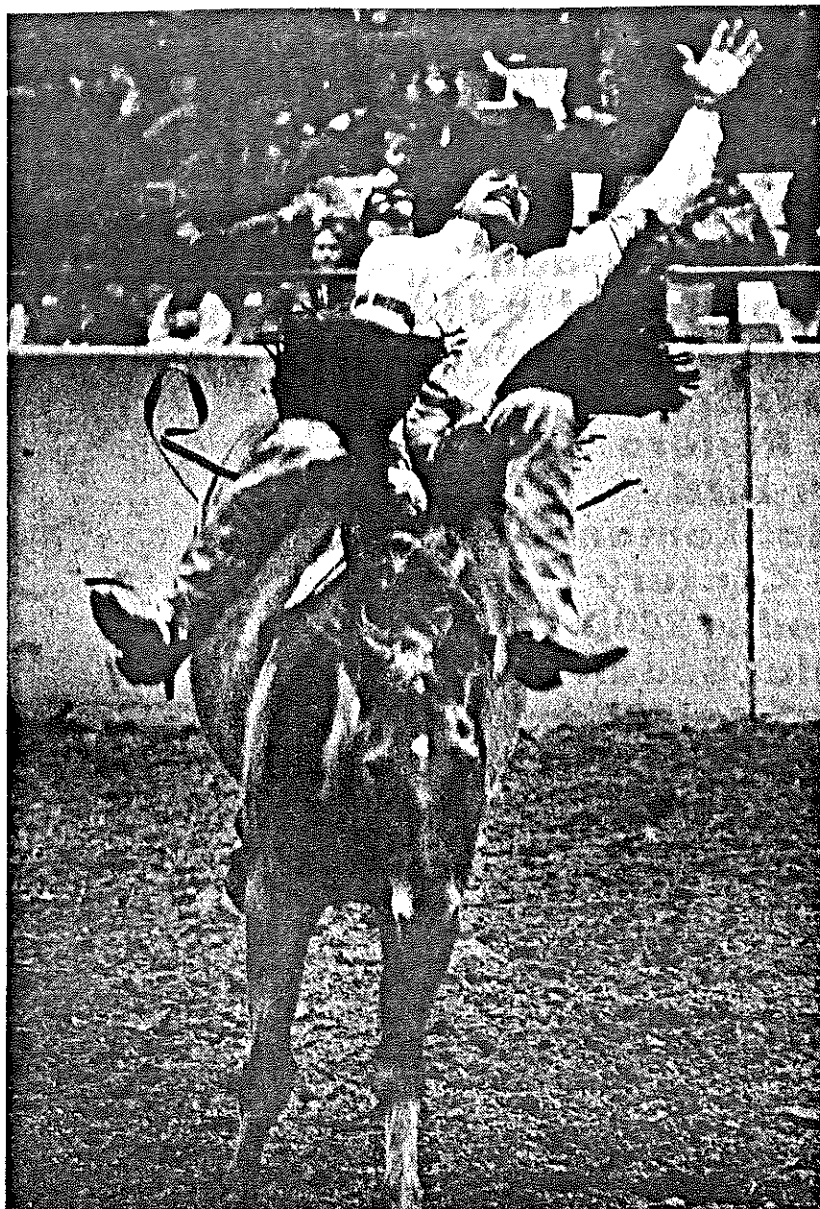

In 1978 a group of women who were members of the Sonoma Commission on the Status of Women (Santa Rosa, CA) initiated a modest community effort to encourage the study of women's history. For the observance they chose a week in March which included the 8th, a day recognized as International Women's Day. Over one hundred years earlier on March 8, 1857, women workers in the New York garment and textile industry staged a rally calling for improved working conditions and equal pay, and three years later almost to the day they formed their own union demanding improvements in the work place.

On March 8, 1908, thousands of women from the needles-trade industry demonstrated unsuccessfully for the same things and further demanded legislation against child labor and for the right of women to vote. In 1910 German workers proposed March 8 be proclaimed as International Women's Day in memory of the earlier struggles of women for better lives, and for the next sixty years March 8 was celebrated by working women in a number of European countries.

In 1982 Women's History Week was first proclaimed a national observance in the United States through joint Congressional resolution, and this year March 2-8 is recognized as National Women's History Week with "Women: Builders of Communities and Dreams" as the theme. Civic and religious groups, women's organizations, schools, libraries and universities across the country are planning events to emphasize women's historic heritage.

Women's History Week is more than a call to acknowledge outstanding American women; countless, nameless ordinary women have shaped the American collective past — "ANONYMOUS" herself as she is often called.

Oh, boy!

THIS COWBOY raised his spurs and dug in hard to hang onto the bucking bronco Saturday during the Preston Fowlkes third annual WKU Championship Rodeo. All he had to do was stay on the horse for eight seconds, but that can be a long ride when the horse doesn't want to cooperate.

With Bruce Springsteen's song "Born in the USA," blaring from loud speakers and a cowgirl clad in red, white and blue waving the American flag, the curtain went up Friday night for Bill Harris and about 40 other cowboys at the Preston Fowlkes third annual WKU Championship Rodeo.

This was not the first time Harris, of Montgomery, Ala., has been to Bowling Green. But this time it may be a profitable visit because he had the highest score in the first night of the bareback riding competition.

And if no one outpoints him in the competition which continued Saturday in Western's Agriculture Exposition Center, he will take home $580 for riding one bucking bronco eight seconds across the center's arena. Of course, he had to do it better than anyone else.

Harris started riding bucking broncos when he was in high school.

"A friend of mine talked me into entering a 4-H rodeo, and I won second in bareback riding," he said. "I liked it so much I decided rodeoing was what I wanted to do."

Harris is not from a rodeo family. As a matter of fact, his brother, Jim Harris, is a Bowling Green attorney. But last year he competed in more than 50 rodeos, some big and some small, on his way to becoming the American Cowboy Association's bareback riding champion.

"I make a living," he said. "I do this and fool with bucking stock."

Harris actually competes in two events, bareback riding and steer wrestling, but he is perhaps best at bareback riding, the object of which is to stay on the horse for eight seconds and do it with style.

While the task seems easy enough, the horse, of course, has other ideas — like trying to toss the cowboy off its back and onto the hard ground.

Harris is only 31 years old, and he said he plans to ride until he gets too old. For him that time will come "when it starts hurting every time I get on the horse."

In the meantime, he is building up his herd of bucking bulls and horses on a 50-acre farm he and his wife lease near Montgomery.

"My goal is to have a rodeo company like this one," he said, but for now he plans to keep on riding bareback and wrestling steers.

He said there are about 80 rodeos scheduled in the United States this year, and the more he wins the more money he will make.

"There's only eight seconds," he said, "and you've got to give it all you've got and a little more."

When he was younger, Harris rode bulls, but he said he was "too scared of them. Now I'm too smart."

What Harris is to bareback riding, Craig Smith, 21, of Gaston, Ala., wants to be to bull riding.

Smith is 5-5½ and weighs only 110 pounds "soaking wet," according to his fellow cowboys, and he climbs on the back of a bull which outweighs him by at least 1,800 pounds.

Last year he finished about 23rd in the country in bull riding, and even he will admit that "maybe I'm a little bit too small."

But bull riding is his sport, and he would one day like to win the championship.

When he climbed on his first bull at 15, Smith said he was "scared to death, but when you do it a little bit more, you learn to deal with the fear."

Smith trains horses when he isn't riding bulls, and this gives him the financial support he needs to continue to compete.

While most of the attention at the WKU rodeo focused on the riders and their exploits, the rodeo also offered its own comedy in the form of traditional rodeo clowns like Reggie Purvis.

In his big appearance of the evening, Purvis dressed in green and purple for his "dance fever" act, went looking for a dance partner. He found one in the form of another rodeo clown, theoretically a redheaded woman with an ample build.

To the delight of the crowd, especially the children, the two danced to several rock 'n' roll tunes and even did the "funky chicken."

They left the arena shortly after the announcer told Purvis he had better get his dance partner "out of here before she strips a gear."

At the end of the first night's competition, Harris was in first place in bareback riding with a 71. Stave Chapman of Lafayette, Ga., runner-up to the world calf roping champion last year, was first in that event at 8.14 seconds.

Peter Herbert of Franklin, Tenn., was first in steer wrestling at four seconds, and Pam Bartley was first in barrel racing at 14.3 seconds.

In rodeo competition, the competitors get only one chance to win. Another group of cowboys were to compete Saturday in the rodeo.

BGJHS math team wins

The team from Bowling Green Junior High School earned first place in regional competition of MATHCOUNTS conducted at Western Kentucky University.

Team members Alex Duncan, Craig Bitterling, John Franklin and Brian Wallace finished first, third, seventh and eighth, respectively, in Saturday's competition.

The team, coached by Bonnie Gibson and Jean Hurt, will advance to the state finals in Lexington on April 5.

Also advancing will be the runner-up team from Alvaton Elementary School. Alvaton's team, coached by James H. Snider, consists of Russell Cheek, Chris Glahn, Julie Bennett and Scott Smith.

The competition among seventh- and eighth-graders consists of written and oral tests and is designed to counter declining math skills among precollege students.

MATHCOUNTS has been sponsored by the Society of Professional Engineers with the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics for the past three years.

Powerlifters win

Several powerlifters from Bowling Green won or placed high in competitions last weekend.

Western student Tracy Holder won the Collegiate Drug Free Powerlifting Contest in Phoenix Ariz.

He set a national record in the 240-pound class squat with 700 pounds. He set a collegiate record of 430 in the bench press and he had a total of 1,680 pounds.

In a high school competition at Fort Knox last weekend, Jay Tinerola won the 181-pound class bench press with a record lift of 308 pounds.

Andy Kilbourne won the 148-pound class, and Duane Burch was second in the 165-pound class.

WKU financial aid available

Western Kentucky University students will find adequate financial aid to continue their college careers next year if they apply now.

Lee Watkins, WKU student financial aid director, said that although there has been concern about the future of financial aid, Western has received an increase in available funds each of the last 18 years.

Watkins said funding for federal student aid in the coming academic year is expected to equal this year's allocation.

Students should apply by April 1 to insure they will receive awards in time for fall fee payment, Watkins said. D. N. 3-2-72

Writer Stuart to be honored

Western Kentucky University will join other state universities and colleges in Passages, a year-long celebration of the 80th birthday of Kentucky writer Jesse Stuart.

Dr. Jim Wayne Miller, Passages state coordinator, said the program will feature outdoor drama, Jesse Stuart weekends at the Jesse Stuart Lodge at Greenbo State Resort and Park, bus tours to the Jesse Stuart home and other activities.

The program is designed to preserve the legacy of the internationally known Kentucky writer, Miller said. Other colleges and universities from Ohio, Virginia and Tennessee also will participate in the celebration. D. N. 3-2-72

WKU offering crime courses

Western Kentucky University will begin offering courses in criminal justice as part of a cooperative master's degree program with Eastern Kentucky University.

The program is designed for those interested in general criminal justice, criminal justice education, police administration, corrections and loss prevention.

Dean Elmer Gray, WKU graduate college, said Western faculty will offer 15 of the 30 hours required for the degree.

Several win academic awards

Several Bowling Green and Warren County high school students won awards in the Sweet 16 Academic Showcase regional scholastic competition recently on the Western Kentucky University campus.

The award winners by area of competition included:

Math — Third, Bowling Green High School, team members, Michael Finley, Anson Hsieh, Cris Patton and Kathy Lewis.

Speech, first, Robert Meadows, Warren Central High School; third, Alice Smothers, Warren Central; sixth, Cyndi Grice, Bowling Green.

Music — Second, Heather Nicely, Bowling Green; fourth, Ann Budde, Warren East.

Art — Two dimensional, first, Elizabeth Pulsinelli, Bowling Green.

Art — Three dimensional, third, Jennifer Wansack, Bowling Green.

Documentary on WKU's Miller receives award

A documentary production of the Western Kentucky University Television Center will be honored at the 29th San Francisco International Film Festival on March 27.

"I have a place: The poetry of Jim Wayne Miller" will receive the festival's Golden Gate Award, the top honor offered in each of the festival's competitive categories.

This is the second national-level award for the film, which received a bronze medal in the 1985 International Film and Television Festival of New York.

The program is a documentary profile of Miller, who was named Kentucky's poet laureate last week by the General Assembly. His latest work, "Nostalgia for 70," was published in January.

A professor of German at Western, the poet and critic has received several honors for his work in poetry, including the 1980 Thomas Wolfe Literary Award. His "Vein of Words" was selected by the Appalachian Writers Association as the "best Appalachian book" published in 1985.

The film was created and directed by Michal Lasater, senior producer/director at Western's Television Center. His previous documentaries in music and literature have won awards at the American Film Festival, the Birmingham International Educational Film Festival and from the Videotape Production Association of New York.

The program was supported, in part, by funding from the Kentucky Humanities Council, through a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Already aired statewide in Kentucky on KET, the documentary will be offered to public television stations throughout the nation in May by the Eastern Educational Network, Boston, Mass.

Classes offered

Following a 1980 Kentucky law requiring continuing education for nurses, Western Kentucky University set up programming to allow registered nurses and licensed practical nurses to fulfill continuing education requirements and gain re-licensing.

Classes will include interpersonal communication skills for nurses, assessment of the heart and lungs and hepatitis/AIDS: epidemics of fear.

Classes are also open to dietitians, social workers and nurses in home care.

Class size depends on the course, with a 10-person limit on a course for CPR instructors and a 15 person limit in assessment of the heart.

Eight schools, including Western Kentucky University, in four states are set to participate in "Passages: A Jesse Stuart 80th Birthday Celebration" this year.

A statewide, year-long series of activities and programs sponsored by The Jesse Stuart Foundation, "Passages" will also feature an outdoor drama, special Jesse Stuart weekends at Greenbo State Resort Park in April and September, and bus tours to nearby W-Hollow, Jesse Stuart's home in Greenup County.

Established in 1979 and headquartered in Ashland, the Jesse Stuart Foundation is dedicated to preserving the legacy of the internationally known Kentucky writer.

Kentucky's poet laureate from 1954 until his death in 1984 and a prolific author of more than 60 books, Stuart would have been 80 on Aug. 8 of this year.

According to Dr. Jim Wayne Miller, a Western professor who was recently named Kentucky's latest poet laureate, additional programs and activities are scheduled throughout the year at colleges and universities in Kentucky and neighboring states.

Miller, state coordinator of "Passages," said Western, Morehead State, the University of Louisville, Murray State, Kentucky State, Ohio University - Southern Campus, Marshall University (Huntington, W.Va.), and Lincoln Memorial University (Harrogate, Tenn.), have agreed to participate. Other schools and professional organizations, he said, are expected to join soon.

High school students will also participate in some of the planned programs by competing in essay contests.

A program of readings, contests and films will be conducted at Western on April 3. Also, the university will offer next fall a three-hour course on Stuart's work. And on Oct. 2, "His place, his people: Panel, Awards and Films" is scheduled on Western's campus.

Non-CREDIT COURSE SCHEDULE

SPRING SEMESTER, 1986

TO REGISTER BY PHONE, CALL 745-5305

OFFICE OF NON-TRADITIONAL PROGRAMS

WESTERN KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY

WHAT

Each semester Western Kentucky University offers a wide variety of non-credit, special-interest classes for interested citizens. Read through the schedule and plan now to join us for a time of fun, learning, and personal/professional enrichment—free from the pressures of exams and grades.

WHERE

Most of our classes are taught at various locations on campus; however, some may be taught at a convenient location off campus (e.g., Bowling Green Public Library, a place of business, etc.). If you don't know the course location, call 745-5305 and we will be glad to explain or send you a map of the campus.

WHEN

Non-credit, continuing education courses are primarily taught in the evening. They vary in length and are scheduled on a "staggered" basis throughout the semester.

WHO

The courses are open to all interested adults. Some of our instructors are regular faculty or staff members at Western, but some are qualified professionals or artisans from the community at large. Enrollment in non-credit courses does not require, nor does it constitute, formal admission to Western Kentucky University.

REGISTRATION

Pre-registration is required for all courses. You may register at the Office of Non-Traditional Programs, 111 Cravens Graduate Center on Western's campus, or by calling 745-5305 to indicate your interest and then forwarding the appropriate course(s) fee.

To ensure getting the class you want, register and pay the fee early, since enrollments in some classes may be limited. Registration for all classes will be on a first come, first served basis. It is important that you pre-register and pay the enrollment fee since classes without sufficient pre-registrations will be cancelled.

Course fees and payments. Fees for non-credit courses vary from course to course. Fees may be paid in person at 111 Cravens Graduate Center or by mail and should be received within five days after your pre-registration. Persons are not officially enrolled until the fee payment is received. Checks should be made payable to Western Kentucky University. Should you decide to withdraw, you must notify the Office of Non-Traditional Programs by phone or by writing prior to the beginning date of the class. If you withdraw before the class begins, you will receive a refund of your fee less $5.00. No refunds will be made after the class begins. Should the course for which you register be cancelled, you will receive a full refund. Persons 65 or older qualify for a full scholarship for these courses, and interested senior citizens should call 745-5305 for details on securing the necessary document.

CAMPUS PARKING

Parking permits are not required after 5 p.m. Parking is not allowed in spaces designated for other use.

WKU gets assembly help with funding

3-18-86
From Daily News
and AP Reports

The Senate Appropriations and Revenue Committee today gave Western Kentucky University a financial shot in the arm by approving several additions to the state universities' capital construction budgets.

The committee approved $190,000 in bond authorization for a multi-purpose agriculture building at Western, plus additional money for equipment purchases, and $50,000 in planning money for a sheriff's training academy.

Bowling Green lawmakers Reps. Billy Ray Smith and Jody Richards and Sen. Frank Miller lobbied for the additions that weren't included in Gov. Martha Layne Collins' original budget proposal for the biennium.

"We're tickled to death," said Smith, a Democrat. "We feel like if we get this in the Senate budget we'll be in real good shape. Of course the worse thing that could happen would be that the House wouldn't concur with the Senate.

"But right now we feel good about it. It's a big plus for Western and our area. We just hope we can keep it and protect the home base right now. A lot of the credit goes to Senator Miller on this. He worked hard on it over there."

Richards and Miller couldn't be reached for comment.

The committee also decided to keep money in the executive branch budget for centers of excellence and endowed chairs at the eight state universities — almost a complete turnaround from how the House dealt with the proposal.

Committee chairman Mike Moloney, D-Lexington, said he kept the money in after talking with Collins, who has been the major supporter of the programs.

The committee's budget, scheduled for a vote on Wednesday, appropriates $75,000 in fiscal year 1987 for planning of the centers and $1.875 million in 1988 for starting them.

Collins had asked for $3.75 million in 1988 for the centers.

The Senate version also includes $2 million in 1988 for endowed chairs at the universities, the same amount sought by Collins. But the committee appropriates the money only if the schools can raise a similar amount from private sources.

Moloney, who earlier had opposed the idea of centers of excellence because they had not been adequately defined by university officials, said his conversation with the governor changed his mind.

"There's a feeling — let's make a run at it, see if we can do it," Moloney said.

That item in the Senate version of the budget sets the stage for a showdown with the House, which removed all money for the centers and left only $800,000 for endowed chairs.

"We're not against the concept," Smith said of the House's stand. "It certainly has merit, there is a place for the centers, but not right now. Our priorities should be put in other places."

Other universities fare well in the Senate version of the budget, especially in the area of capital construction.

WKU funding

By A. J. ...

The committee added money for debt service for construction of an $11 million agricultural engineering building at the University of Kentucky and a $3.5 million regulatory services building at the Lexington campus. Those two items were not contained in the governor's recommendation or the House budget.

Other additions to university capital construction budgets include:

—$500,000 in bond authorization to study a new sports arena at Murray State University.

—DEBT service for a $3.2 million animal care center at the University of Louisville.

—DEBT service to pay one-half the cost of a $10 million "super computer" at UK, provided the school obtains the other $5 million from private sources.

On the ticklish subject of paying for a $33 million training program promised to Toyota Motor Corp., the committee removed debt service to pay for the training with bonds.

About $20 million is set aside in General Fund money to pay for the training in 1986-88. The budget document will contain language that if the additional $13 million is needed in the coming biennium, it should come from the $100 million reserve that is included in the budget.

Meanwhile, acting Transportation Secretary C. Leslie Dawson has been "doing some good maneuvering" to line up support for a proposed increase in the gasoline tax, as one House leader described the process.

Much of the horse trading was done in offices of Speaker Don Blandford, who is among Democratic leaders lobbying on behalf of House Bill 126.

The legislation, which may come before the House today, calls for boosting the 10-cent tax by as much as a nickel a gallon. It also would repeal the weight-distance tax for trucks weighing 60,000 pounds or more and replace it with a decal fee ranging from $150 to $200.

More than 80 county judges

From

rallied outside the Capitol on Monday for passage of the proposed tax hike.

"I see people standing here who I know can get the job done," Collins told the crowd of judges.

"We're talking about getting our children to school safely. We're talking about economic development," she said. "It's very important for the future of Kentucky. It's time now for us to go ahead and face up to it."

Dawson, meanwhile, was inside the Capitol learning how much legislators wanted from him in return for facing up.

"I guess Secretary Dawson's doing some good maneuvering," House Majority Whip Kenny Rapier said, referring to Dawson's promises of highway projects in exchange for lawmakers' support. "They seem to want to vote that way when the come out of there."

Dawson has been a fixture in Blandford's suite for the past few days, and House leaders said Monday they had more than enough votes for passage and would bring it up for action this afternoon.

Rapier, D-Bardstown, and Blandford, D-Philpot, said 57 of the chamber's 100 members had promised to vote for the bill.

Majority Leader Greg Stumbo, however, declined to confirm the estimates. The Prestonsburg Democrat said any head count on a tax plan is subject to losses. "On something like this there's always more take than give," Stumbo said.

The General Assembly killed similar legislation during a special session last summer. But Collins and Blandford have said road needs are greater now, making the tax increase all the more necessary.

The tax would be tied to the wholesale price of gasoline, which has plunged in recent months. For every 2-cent decrease in gasoline prices, the state would impose a penny increase in the tax, up to a maximum of 5 cents a gallon.

Because of further expected declines, the full nickel hike could be in place by July 1, some observers believe. There are no provisions in the bill to abolish the tax, should gas prices start climbing again.

Johnson appointed

Ms. Anna Jo Johnson, an English teacher at Bowling Green High School, has been appointed to the Central Canadian Studies Committee by Western Kentucky University's Vice President of Academic Affairs, Robert Haynes.

The appointment came as a result of her involvement with an ad hoc group of faculty and others interested in Canadian Studies at WKU.

Mrs. Johnson plans to bring his experience with Canadian studies to the classroom through essays and Canadian information.

Last summer, she coordinated a Canadian Studies In-Service Workshop for public school teachers at Western Kentucky University. "The workshop was designed to provide public school teachers with information about Canada, so they can use the classroom as a vehicle for introducing Canada into the awareness of American citizenry," Mrs. Johnson said.

Bowling Green man arrested by WKU police

D.N. 3-20-86
Western Kentucky University police have arrested a Bowling Green man who is accused of endangering his son's life by driving under the influence.

Emmanuel Ike Okwunze, 27, of Lodge Apartments, Apt. B-7 was charged with DUI after being involved in a two-car accident Monday at Center Street and University Boulevard, according to WKU Assistant Public Safety Director Horace Johnson.

There were no injuries, but Okwunze's 5-year-old son was in the car at the time, Johnson said. After presentation of the case to the Cabinet of Human Resources and the county attorney's office, a warrant was issued charging Okwunze with first degree wanton endangerment.

Okwunze was arrested Wednesday night and lodged in the Warren County Jail in lieu of $1,000 cash bond.

6 Kentucky journalists selected for state Hall of Fame at UK

C.J. Associated Press 3-23-86
LEXINGTON, Ky. — Creed Black, chairman and publisher of the Lexington Herald-Leader, is among six journalists selected to the Kentucky Journalism Hall of Fame at the University of Kentucky.

Also selected were John Ed Pearce, a columnist for The Courier-Journal Magazine; Tom and Pat Gish, owners and publishers of The Mountain Eagle at Whitesburg; O. Leonard Press, executive director of Kentucky Educational Television; and David B. Whitaker, former head of the department of journalism at Western Kentucky University.

The awards will be presented April 17 in conjunction with the ninth annual Joe Creason lecture.

The Hall of Fame was established in 1981 by the university's Journalism Alumni Association to honor people who have made a significant contribution to the profession. Honorees may be Kentucky natives or people who have spent a portion of their career in the state, working in either print or broadcast journalism.

This year's inductees bring the Hall of Fames membership to 52.

Eugene Patterson, chairman and chief executive officer of the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times, will be the 1987 Creason lecturer. Patterson, a recipient of the Pulitzer Prize, is also president of the Times' Washington publication, Congressional Quarterly.

Miller expects little trouble with state okaying U.S. '68-80

By JIM HIGHLAND

Daily News Special Writer

State Sen. Frank Miller will meet with state Transportation Secretary Les Lawson on Tuesday to work out details to construct a four-lane highway between Bowling Green and Russellville.

Miller said the meeting comes on the heels of the Kentucky General Assembly's passage of a five-cent a gallon gasoline tax increase; however, Miller declined to say there was a relationship between the two.

The Bowling Green senator said he met last week with Gov. Martha Layne Collins about the Bowling Green-Russellville project and others, and he said the governor was very positive in her responses to his suggestions.

He said he anticipates relatively little trouble getting a commitment for the project which he anticipated will have a commercial, economic impact on both communities.

The state Transportation Department has already held public hearings on plans to widen U.S. 68-80, a plan that has drawn support locally from business and industrial leaders.

Miller said the only real stumbling block for the project at this point is at Auburn where residents will have to decide where they want the road to be located.

There are three different proposals, Miller said. One calls for constructing the highway through the center of town or a northern or a southern by-pass around the community.

In addition to the four-lane project, Miller said an additional $600,000 will be used for road improvements in Warren County and an additional $400,000 for road improvements in Logan County.

He said he will have a list of specific projects after his meeting with Dawson.

Miller said he also anticipates that Western Kentucky University's budget will be approved by the joint Senate and House Appropriations and Revenue Conference Committee as recommended in the Senate version.

That version calls for spending

$900,000 on new equipment and $273,000 for additions to Western's Agriculture Pavilion. The House earlier added to the governor's recommended budget $1.4 million for improvements to the Kelly Thompson Science Complex.

Miller said he, Dr. Kern Alexander, WKU president; Dr. Paul Cook, WKU executive vice president; and Bill Blvin, Western's attorney, met with Sen. Mike Malloney last week and the lawmaker assured them the projects would remain in the budget.

Based on that conversation, Miller said, "I assume it will be left in tact."

Speaking for the university, Cook said, "We are very pleased. Our concern is what happens next week."

"If all that occurs, we will be in good shape relative to where we were before," he said. "We are still marginal as far as salaries are concerned."

Cook was referring to the fact that the budget as proposed provides $1.6 million to Western for faculty and staff salary increases, and it will cost about $2 million to fund a 5-percent salary increase for faculty. (See related story on Page 5-A.)

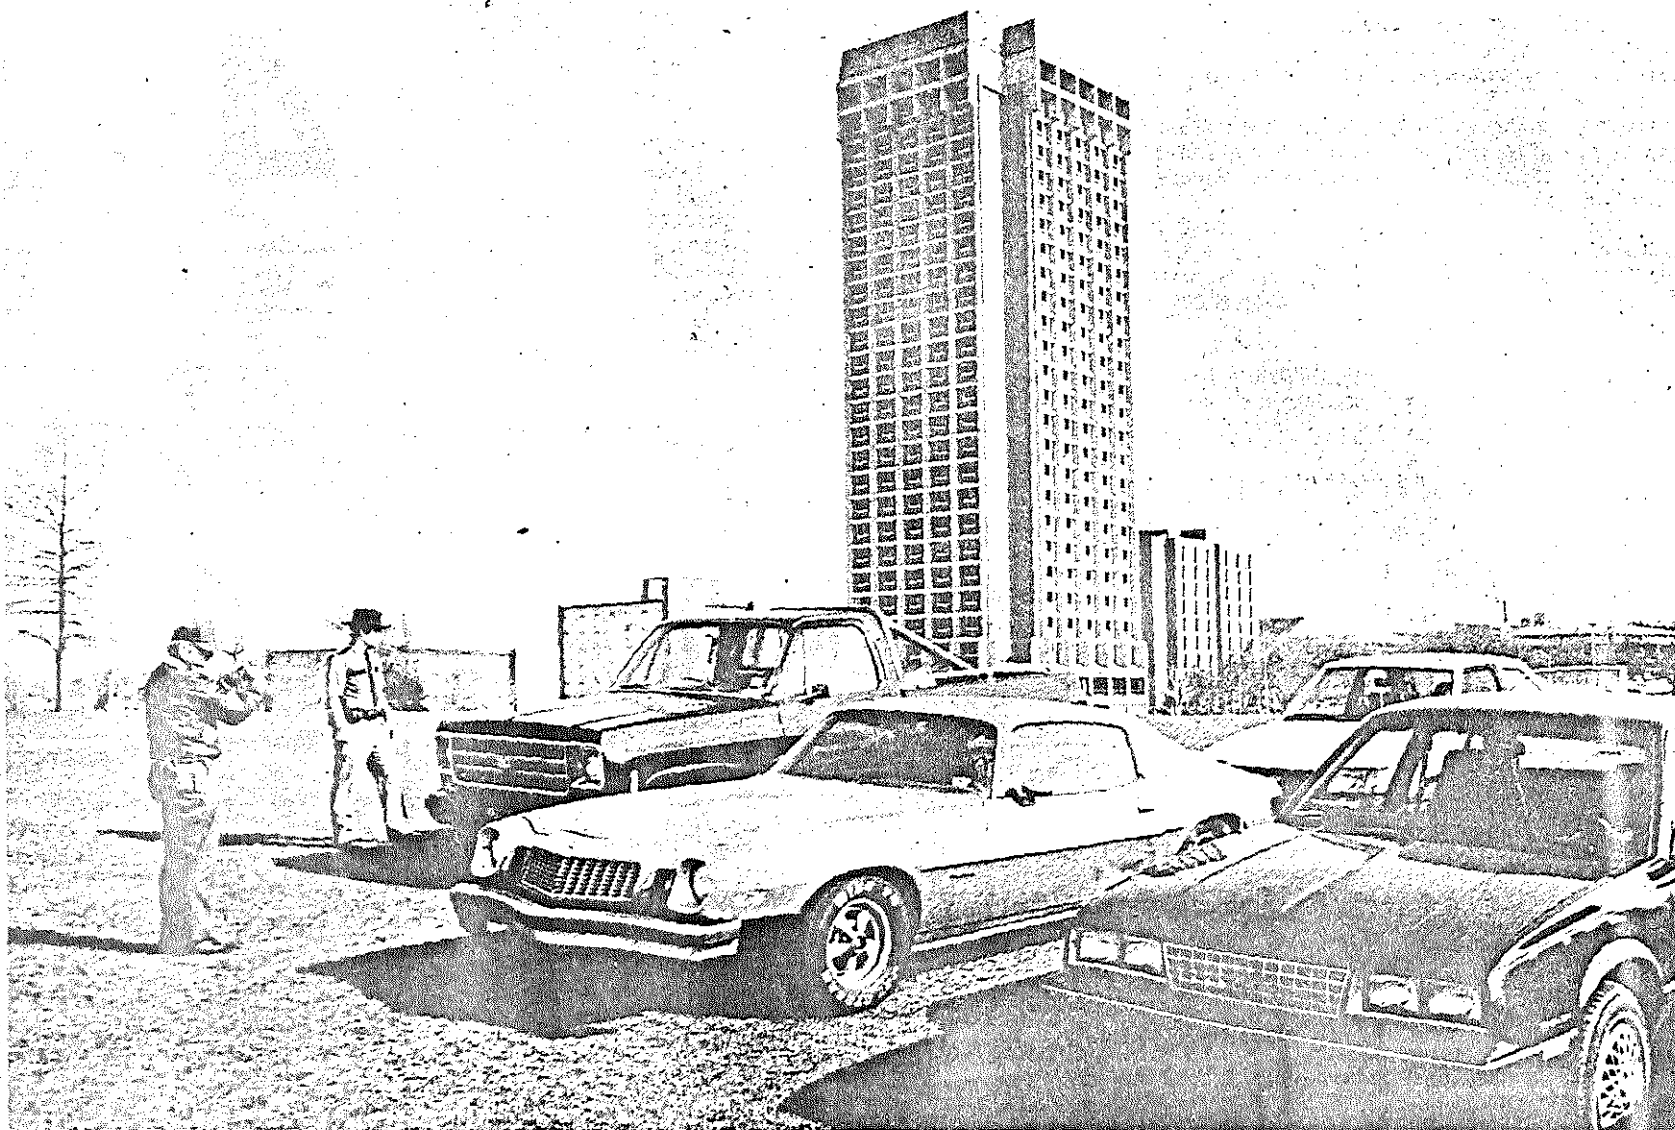

A 5-percent salary increase cannot be made without making some reductions internally, Cook said.

At the same time, Cook praised Miller and state Reps. Jody Richards and Billy Ray Smith, also of Bowling Green, for their work during the current legislative session.

In addition to his work on Western's funds, Miller said he also was able to restore in the budget $50,000 for the Kentucky sheriff's academy which is scheduled to begin operations on the WKU campus this summer.

Miller is anticipating the budget will be adopted Thursday or Friday.

Gray honored

Editor, Daily News:

Many older people here in Bowling Green will be interested to know that Dr. Harry Gray, formerly of Bowling Green, on March 12 received the National Science Award from President Reagan in Washington, D.C. He is the youngest person ever to receive this award. His mother, Ruby Gray, who lives at 633 E. 11th St., was invited to the awards ceremony and to the reception at the White House.

Harry graduated from Bowling

Green High and Western Kentucky University. He was a paper boy for the Daily News for many years. He is presently a Professor in the Chemistry Department at Cal. Tech. at Pasadena, Calif. where he lives with his wife.

Harry is the son of the late Barkus Gray who was principal of Bowling Green High for many years. His mother was with the American Red Cross before she retired. Bowling Green should be very proud of their native son.

Coronet acquires WKU production

A Western Kentucky University Television Center production was acquired by Coronet Films, the nation's largest distributor of educational films and video materials.

The program, "Poetry: A Beginner's Guide," will be distributed nationally by Coronet/MTI Film & Video, Inc., a subsidiary of Simon & Schuster Communications.

The film was co-produced by Mary Ellen Miller, associate professor of English at Western, and Michael Lasater, senior producer/director at Western's Television Center.

Featuring poets Jim Wayne Miller and Joy Bale Boon, the production deals with the elements of poetry, as well as the craft of the poet. Narration is supplied by Western professor of English, James Heldman.

Following the first release in late 1984 of the film on Kentucky Educational Television, the program was subsequently chosen as a finalist in the 1985 Birmingham International Educational Film Festival and won a red ribbon in that year's American Film Festival, the nation's oldest film and video event conducted annually in New York City.

Extra funding for faculty pay is unlikely

D. N.

3-25-86

From Daily News
and AP Reports

Although it is likely Western Kentucky University will receive state funds for several capital construction projects in 1986-88, it is unlikely the school will receive additional money to increase faculty salaries at or above the proposed 5 percent, according to a Bowling Green lawmaker.

The House and Senate met Thursday in the conference committee on the 1986-88 budget and the only major sticking points, as predicted before the meetings began, involved higher education issues such as Commonwealth Centers, endowed chairs and university faculty salaries.

According to Democratic Reps. Jody Richards of Bowling Green and Kenny Rapier of Bardstown, House and Senate members have made fairly even trades on the differences between the two chambers' budget plans.

The Commonwealth Centers and endowed chairs are close to the heart of Gov. Martha Layne Collins and are included in the Senate budget.

Higher faculty salaries, at the expense of the experimental programs, have been embraced by several representatives.

"That's where we're hung up," Rapier said after the conference ended its work Thursday. "We don't want to give up on salary."

Richards agreed, saying, "The only area affecting Western in the higher education part of the budget, the only area not totally resolved, is the additional salary money the House proposed when it took funds away from the Commonwealth Centers and endowed chairs.

"The Senate has put money back into those projects, although we wish it wouldn't," he continued. "But the amount of additional salary money we will get in, well, I'm just not sure."

Rep. Billy Ray Smith, D-Bowling Green, couldn't be reached for comment.

Collins initially proposed $3.825 million for Commonwealth Centers, which are supposed to provide distinctive programs at the universities. To go along with those, she proposed $2 million for endowed professorships and $1 million for quality incentive grants.

The House removed virtually all of that funding except for $800,000 for endowed chairs.

More than $6.1 million that was saved from those and other areas was placed by the House into salary increases.

But the Senate committee, under the leadership of Sen. Mike Moloney, D-Lexington, replaced some of the money for Commonwealth Centers, $1.95 million, and $2 million for endowed chairs, apparently at the urging of the governor.

Collins proposed a 5-percent salary increase for state employees, but it is likely Western's faculty and staff will receive something less than that.

With the additional $460,000 the House proposed for Western's faculty and staff, the university may have been able to meet the 5-percent mark.

Western President Kern Alexander was in Florida and couldn't be reached for comment, but Paul Cook, university executive vice president, said the school's capital construction projects have met with "considerable support" from the General Assembly.

"As far as the salary issue goes, though, I really don't have a feel for it right now," Cook said. "I have a hope for it, and you know what that is."

According to Rapier, the centers and endowed chairs may be revived in the final budget at figures slightly less than the Senate, probably $1.2 million for the centers and $800,000 for the endowed chairs.

The disagreement has also affected several major capital construction projects at the universities which were added by the Senate.

But Richards and Sen. Frank Miller, D-Bowling Green, said the proposed $1.43 million for renovation of the north wing of the Kelly Thompson Science complex, $190,000 for a multipurpose agriculture building at the Agriculture Exposition Center, and $50,000 seed money for a sheriff's training academy are still intact.

"I've practically lived with these people (the conference committee members) for the last two days," Richards said.

"I've given them each a copy of everything we need at Western and explained it to them in great detail," he continued. "So I think most of the Western projects we've worked so hard for will be in the budget."

All of the members of the conference emphasized that nothing is settled until a vote is taken in committee and the final draft is delivered to lawmakers, who must have it for 24 hours before it can be considered in the chambers.

That final vote is now expected Tuesday.

Areas where tentative compromises have been reached include:

COMMERCE — Funding for the $33 million training program for Toyota workers will be about $21 million in the 1986-88 budget. If the entire sum is needed during the coming biennium, the money will come from surplus funds, which was the Senate preference.

The committee split the difference between the chambers on the amount of new economic development bonds the cabinet may issue, $20 million in fiscal year 1987 and $10 million in 1988.

The House suggestion of $4.5 million in new money for the Kentucky Development Finance Authority's loan program was adopted, but the funds will be bonds, as the Senate proposed.

TOURISM — The House suggestion of more than $4.6 million for development of Taylorsville Lake was adopted. The Senate had proposed less than $2 million.

The cabinet will receive an increase of $1 million for advertising, rather than the $1.5 million proposed by the House.

JUSTICE — Authorization for 25 new Kentucky State Police troopers will be included.

HUMAN RESOURCES — The House suggestion of an increase in the personal needs allowance for Medicaid recipients in nursing homes from $25 per month to $40 was adopted. Language will be included in the budget to ensure that the money goes to the individuals rather than the nursing homes for distribution.

A compromise was reached on expanding Aid to Families With Dependent Children program to children in complete families. Collins' plan to expand services to 12 years old, up from 5 years old, will be included in the first year. The program will be expanded to age 18 in the second year.

More money will go to spouse abuse programs, as suggested by the House, but the Senate won out on family planning money, which is slightly less than the House.

Special needs adoption programs will get a boost of more than $1 million in the House plan.

EDUCATION — A plan to allow full retirement benefits for teachers after 27 years of service was deleted. A bill authorizing early retirement has been killed in the session.

TRANSPORTATION — Extra money to buy 300 new vehicles for the state motor pool, at a cost of $3 million, was moved to early retirement of bonds.

University programs gain in compromise on education

By RICHARD WILSON

C.J. Staff Writer 3-29-86

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Money to begin nourishing outstanding state university academic programs and keep good professors on the public university campuses remained intact in a compromise education budget hammered out yesterday by a House-Senate committee.

These were the major compromises reached by the conferees on Gov. Martha Layne Collins' proposed 1986-88 executive budget.

In elementary and secondary education, the conference committee of five representatives and three senators added a few programs to the initiatives earmarked for funding in last summer's special legislative session.

"We did what we said we were going to do in elementary and secondary education. The direction then was turned to higher education, and some significant new dollars were put into it," said Sen. Michael R. Moloney, the Lexington Democrat who heads the Senate's Appropriations and Revenue Committee and one of the conferees.

The House and Senate are expected to vote on the revised budget Tuesday.

The major compromise came in the areas of "quality incentives" proposed by the governor and the Senate but virtually deleted by the House, and in more generous funding for special salary increases called for by the House.

The Senate prevailed in giving

Collins half of the $3.8 million she wanted for special academic "centers of excellence" on the campuses the second year of the biennium.

A $75,000 allocation goes to the Council on Higher Education in 1986-87 to jointly set guidelines for the centers with university officials.

The compromise also retained the $2 million proposed by Collins and the Senate for 1987-88 to fund endowed chairs to be filled with top-notch professors. The House had recommended only $800,000.

The education council will designate which schools receive funding for the chairs. Those campuses must raise private matching funds dollar-for-dollar to help finance the chairs.

The House prevailed in raising the ante for a special faculty salary incentive fund. The Senate accepted Collins' proposal of $8.5 million over the two-year period, but the conferees took the House proposal of $14.5 million.

Campus officials must develop guidelines for allocating the money to individual professors.

Also accepted was the House proposal that the special pay raises be built into the campuses' salary bases, instead of being one-time

Spending plan to aid prisons, public schools and foster care

By ROBERT T. GARRETT

Staff Writer

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Resolving their differences the easy way, with $10 million from unbudgeted tax increases greasing the skids, House and Senate conferees agreed yesterday on a $13.38 billion biennial state budget.

The spending plan consolidates gains for public education and Kentucky's foster children that were financed by business-tax increases last summer and advances Gov. Martha Layne Collins sought nine weeks ago for state universities, prisons, social programs and industrial recruitment.

The legislature already has expanded road programs, by raising the gasoline tax, largely on its own initiative, earlier this month.

But through the report drafted by a free conference committee yesterday, the lawmakers put their stamp on the state budget in other ways — for instance, outpacing Collins in boosting university faculty salaries and delivering a taller mound of bricks and mortar to the campuses and school districts.

Both the governor and the legislature shied away from ambitious new social programs or major reforms of health-care delivery, but the executive and judicial branch budgets that will be voted on by the House and Senate Tuesday contain a number of gains for which the raises as proposed by the governor and Senate.

The budget contains $881,000 proposed by the Senate to offset federal cuts for county extension employees. The money will assure that these officials receive at least 5 percent annual salary increases.

Excluding the salary incentive dollars, Moloney said there was money in the budget to provide annual average salary increases of "above 5 percent" for university faculty and staff members. "I don't know how much above," he added.

Salary increases have been campus administrators' top financial priorities for the next biennium requested. The administrators claimed the 2 and 3 percent back-to-back raises in the current biennium were making it difficult to retain their best professors.

In the area of campus construction and maintenance, the conferees provided debt service to finance everything proposed by Collins and both chambers. Most of the campus improvements would be financed by bonds. The total amount of debt service was not available last night.

The panel did delete a $50,000 allocated to Western Kentucky University to start a sheriff's academy. Moloney said these funds, proposed by the Senate, were dropped because the legislature has called for a study of law-enforcement training programs in the state to be reported to the 1988 General Assembly.

The revised budget also retains the $500,000 special appropriation Collins sought to offset a possible enrollment drop this fall at Morehead State University.

"Gov. Collins' budget package has been virtually funded intact, and I think it's a good day for higher education," said Harry Snyder, the education council's executive director.

Rep. Roger Noe, the Harlan Democrat who heads the House Education Committee, called the elementary and secondary education budget "the next step forward" in public school improvements.

Noe said he was not disappointed that more new programs in this area were not funded. "Our main thrust was to provide the money for the programs we passed last summer" in the special session, Noe said.

One new program that was funded to the tune of $1.2 million was Noe's proposal to create model programs for preschool children in 12 school districts.

Also funded was a proposal pushed by the House, but not the Senate, that would set up a consortium for school psychologists. That program would receive $400,000 in 1987-88.

The conferees also followed the House proposal by increasing the $10.1 million Collins recommended in 1987-88 for new school construction by $5 million.

The money, which goes for debt service on bonds, would finance about half of the state's approximately $300 million in unmet school construction needs, said Rep. Harry Moberly Jr., D-Richmond. The governor's proposal would have funded about a third of the need, he added.

The conferees also sided with the House proposal to provide power-equalization dollars to equalize 10 cents of local property taxes in poor school districts in 1986-87 and 13 cents in 1987-88, Moloney said.

Other areas where more money was pumped into the budget include:

✓ $3 million proposed by the House to buy new reading textbooks.

✓ About $1.4 million in 1987-88 to fund a second channel in each locality for the Kentucky Educational Television network.

✓ Allocation of $845,000 the first year of the biennium and $955,000 the second year above the $475,000 recommended each year by Collins in new money for state grants to local libraries. This year's appropriation is $3.6 million.

✓ A House proposal to add $850,000 to the budgets of the Kentucky School for the Blind and Kentucky School for the Deaf to bring teachers' salaries to the level of those in Jefferson County. Nearly $1 million proposed by the Senate was also added to offset impending federal budget reductions.

✓ Another $485,000 proposed by the House remained in the budget to provide matching funds for vocational rehabilitation programs.

The conferees sliced $2.5 million out of the budget for the career-ladder program for teachers in 1987-88 and $5.7 million over the biennium proposed by the House to give teachers full retirement benefits after 27 years of service, instead of 30 years.

The General Assembly killed House Bill 19, which would have authorized the earlier retirement and conferees spent the money elsewhere.

The budget also includes $2.9 million in 1986-87 and $9.9 million in 1987-88 to increase benefits for retired teachers.

Legislature delivering 'bag of goodies' to WKU

When Western Kentucky University late last year submitted to the Kentucky General Assembly what amounted to a shopping list of things needed to maintain its education program, it had little hope of getting what it wanted.

Now, House and Senate conferees, have delivered a "bag of goodies" in their budget recommendations Friday, recommendations which are expected to become law either Monday or Tuesday.

If approved as recommended, the budget will provide $1.4 million for renovation of Western's Thompson Science Complex, $190,000 for a multipurpose building addition to the Agriculture Exposition Center, $900,000 for equipment and $500,000 in additional salary incentive money.

All three members of the Warren County legislative delegation consider what was approved a major victory for Western and its educational programs.

House Education Committee Vice Chairman Jody Richards said the $500,000 in additional money for salaries will be added to the $3.6 million already recommended and permit the university to provide about a 5 percent raise for faculty and staff.

The $500,000 was put into the budget as salary incentive money, he said, but Western can use it any way it wants to meet salary demands. It also is recurring, which means that once a faculty or staff member gets the increase, it will continue to be a part of the base salary.

Richards said the $1.4 million for the science complex will enable the university to, among other things, construct additional laboratory facilities and purchase new equipment, some of which is 50 years old.

Construction of the multipurpose building at the Agriculture Exposition Center was perhaps a pet project of State Rep. Billy Ray Smith who sees it as being tied to economic development.

Smith has been working on the project for four years, and he said the building will be used to house valuable livestock for major horse and cattle shows.

Smith's project had the support of the Bowling Green-Warren County Chamber of Commerce, the City of Bowling Green and the tourism commission.

When people bring their livestock to the exposition center, there is no place to keep them overnight, Smith said. "You could tie them to a stake or a tree, but we did 'not have the facilities to hold them.'"

Smith sees the new building as being making the exposition center more attractive to agriculture and other interests and sees those who attend major shows here spending millions of dollars on food, lodging and other things.

Next to Freedom Hall in Louisville, it's the finest facility of its type in the state, he said. It's also a good recruiting tool for the university.

For Western to fare as well as it did in this year's budget, it took a cooperative effort among Richards, Smith and Miller.

The science complex project was not recommended for funding in Gov. Martha Layne Collins initial budget document, but Richards was able to restore the project in House committee.

State Sen. Frank Miller added the agriculture center project and the money for equipment in the Senate version of the budget, and all three legislators worked with House and Senate conferees on the salary provisions.

Miller said that Western "got everything they asked for" and "should be very pleased."

"I think it has been a right productive session in terms of serving both immediate needs as well as future problems," Miller said, and we did it within the constraints of the budget."

The budget bill also is expected to provide $1.95 million over the biennium for centers of excellence at all state universities and to provide $2 million for endowed professorships. The universities would have to match state money with funds of their own for the professorships.

College hosts businessmen

The College of Business Administration Faculty at Western Kentucky University will host area businessmen April 9 for "Let's Talk Day."

The day, 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m., will be organized with activities to give area businessmen an opportunity to meet faculty, tour facilities, talk with students and provide administrators and faculty with ideas and concerns of the business community.

The university will host a luncheon featuring Western President Dr. Kern Alexander, Executive Vice President Dr. Paul Cook and Dean Robert Hershberger as speakers.

Following the luncheon, a forum for students and faculty will be conducted in Grise Hall. Businessmen will speak concerning their needs as to training, employment qualifications and university relations.
