♦ Food Services

Grand jury will listen to evidenceBY JIM HANNAH AND
MICHAEL A. LINDENBERGER

Public Safety has completed an investigation of Western's former Food Services and has turned the case over to Commonwealth Attorney Steve Wilson.

Wilson is expected to present the case to a grand jury no later than next Wednesday. Wilson said it could be presented tomorrow if he can get it ready by then.

Public Safety Director Horace Johnson would not discuss the specific allegations, but said the case involves more than the charges already filed against former Assistant Director of Food Services Howard P. Lindsey.

Robyn Graham won't be sticking around to find out whether Western's anthropology department will become extinct.

Graham, Anthropology Club president, said she's lucky. She will graduate in December. But she fears for undergrads in the anthropology department because budget cuts might force the program to be scaled down even further.

"Everybody's standing around going, 'Hmm. What's going to happen?'" Graham said. "We probably won't exist in the future."

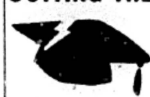

Graham, an anthropology minor and public relations major from Nashville, said she hopes the university can save the anthropology department by combining it with sociology. But she's not sure that will keep about 40, anthropology majors and minors coming to Western.

Potential budget cuts also concern anthropology Professor Jack Schock.

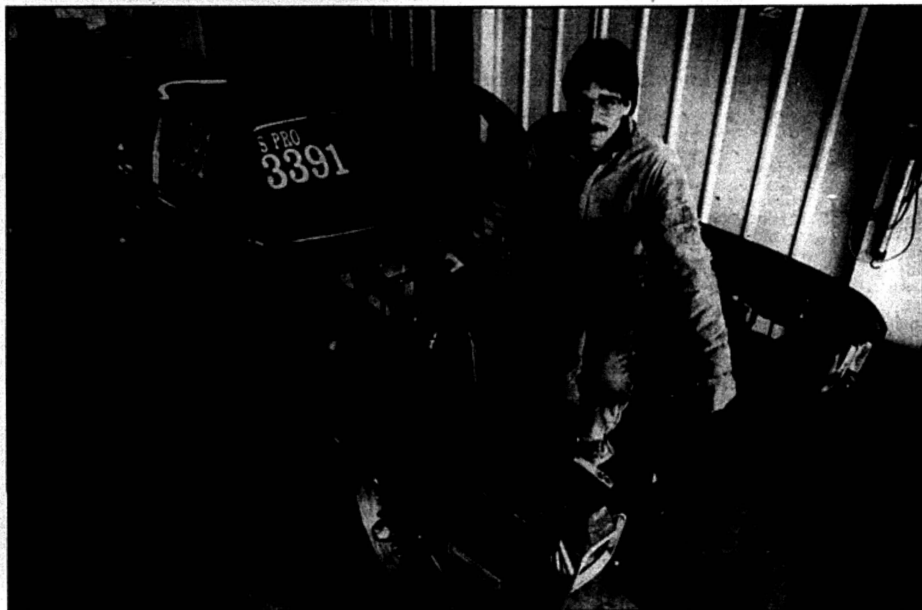

"I think it's important to be teaching anthropology and give students exposure to cultures around the world," he said. "Whether Western keeps it as a major is another question. As far as we are aware, we do not think it will be cut."

Bowling Green graduate student Mark Clauson is surrounded by "Weird Science," his drag car. Clauson is in the process of building a new engine for the upcoming race season. The 30-year-old works in the biology lab in Thompson Complex.

Hobby 'drags' microbiologist out of lab

BY ANYA LOCKERT

During an average week, graduate student Mark Clauson puts in about 12 hours a day at the biology lab in Thompson Complex.

But about three times a month, he jumps into his 1973 red Chevrolet Nova, revs up the engine and hits the race track.

The 30-year-old biology lab technician and coordinator is a drag racer in the superpro class, the fastest and highest sportsman drag race bracket in the United States.

Drag racing is so exciting to Clauson that he said it's almost an addiction.

"Once you get hooked, you can't stop," he said. "I don't know if it's the friends or going down the track 100 miles an hour."

Most of the races Clauson participates in are held in Louisville on the Ohio Valley Raceway. About 100 cars pair up for run-off races on the two-lane track. All of the participants must have their cars in motion before the green light signals the start down the eighth mile straightaway. This process is known as the reaction time.

Clauson said it usually takes six or seven individual races to complete the process of elimination. The final two cars then line up to determine the champion.

"Fifty percent of drag racing is knowing how to win and the other 50 percent is luck," Clauson said.

Last month, Clauson said he won the National DoorSlammers Race in Louisville for the first time, raking in $1,000. He said he has raced six or seven times this year, winning close to $2,000.

"This is my best payout year," he said.

But Clauson said the money is not the reason he loves drag racing.

"There's a caravan of people who go with me that are friends," he said.

"All of us are real close. We're just there to help each other out."

Clauson said he travels with his wife, Jennifer, and a group of friends throughout the race season, which begins in April and usually ends in November.

After the season ends, Clauson said he tears down the red Nova with "Weird Science" emblazoned on one side, and rebuilds the entire car to insure safety for the next season.

When he was a kid, Clauson said he loved to watch drag racing, "and I knew I would be there one day."

Clauson said although he loves the sport, he doesn't want to join the professional ranks.

"It's too much traveling," he said. "I hope things can stay the way they are, if my health and the good Lord will."

Clauson came to Western in 1984 as an undergraduate and started as a full-time employee about three years later. He is finishing his master's degree in microbiology, a field he said that fascinates him more than racing.

"When you study microbiology, you study life," Clauson said. "We wouldn't be here without it."

RUDE AWAKENING: Students in New Coed Hall left out in cold (shower)

♦ Residents can expect to be taking warm showers today

BY MATTHEW TUNGATE

Students in New Coed Hall didn't have hot water Sunday and Monday mornings.

Wayne Mandeville, superintendent of mechanical services, said the steam that heats the dorm's water is being blocked from reaching the water heater. The water heaters in the dorms can use either gas or steam, but steam is used because it costs half as much as gas. The water heater in the New Coed Hall will use gas until the problem is fixed.

Mandeville said that Andy Robinson, an employee from Energy Controls and Management Inc., the company that installed the water heating system, was on campus looking for the problem.

Mandeville said Robinson hadn't found the problem as of last night. When he does, he will go back to the Nashville-based company to get the part to fix it. Mandeville said any maintenance is still on warranty.

The physical plant has received only three reports of hot water going out in New Coed Hall, Mandeville said. However, some students said the hot water has gone out more than just three times.

Chris Foster, a senior from Hawesville, said the hot water has gone out five or six times in the last three weeks.

Students said the water has been going out at inconvenient times, too. "It's always right before class," said Angela McDowell, a senior from Portland, Tenn.

Foster said he was told the hot water was being fixed permanently. McDowell said she hasn't been told anything.

Monica Pettygrue, New Coed Hall director, said every time the hot water goes out, the physical plant is contacted, but added that she hasn't heard many complaints.

EVIDENCE: Information given to commonwealth attorney

Lindsey was arrested Sept. 22 for theft by unlawful taking over $300. The case against Lindsey, who has been suspended from his job in the Downing University Center without pay, has yet to be heard by the grand jury.

Public Safety Detective Mike Wallace, who worked on the Food Services investigation, said he expects several "inter-related" things to be presented to the grand jury. Wallace said he could not comment further because Wilson has asked police not to discuss the case.

Deborah Wilkins, an attorney representing Western, said Public Safety and Wilson's office "have removed a number of Food Services documents, including Super Card account records, in the process of conducting a criminal investigation." Wilkins was responding to a Herald open records request for several Food Services-related documents.

Wilkins said she thinks the records will be used to hand down indictments.

On Oct. 29 former Gov. Louie Nunn told a crowd of more than 300 faculty, staff and students that he has evidence of misuse of Super Cards by student-athletes and employees. Saying Western officials had the investigation "under wraps," Nunn said then that he doubted the case will ever be presented to the grand jury because of "the higher-ups" it would implicate.

"H.P. Lindsey was not the only one involved," he said in an interview last week.

SGA takes to the airwaves

BY JEFF NATIONS

Radio listeners cruising around town will soon be picking up the voice of Student Government Association President Joe Rains on their dials, courtesy of WWHR-FM, Western's New Rock 92.

SGA Public Relations Vice President Patrick Monohan said he hopes to have a new talk show featuring Rains on the air in the next two weeks.

"Just Ask Joe" will feature Rains' answering student questions from letters the SGA office receives. The show will be taped.

Monohan said he hopes the show, which will last about 10-15 minutes, will draw enough response to merit an airing every day. Currently, the show is scheduled to air once or twice a week.

Last week SGA began advertising in the College Heights Herald and on New Rock 92 for students to start sending in their questions.

Rains said questions are "slowly coming in."

Rains said the show is an effort to learn what students on campus are thinking.

"We're trying to find any kind of way to find out what's on the mind of students out there and getting it in here."

Joe Rains

Monohan said since the uproar over rumored state budget cuts in October, the campus has become fairly calm. "Right now no one is bringing up the little things."

Monohan thinks the show will benefit students. "If they don't want to attend the (SGA) meetings, or don't want to get involved with legislation, but have a question, then this way Joe will be able to be there to answer it."

The idea for a student government radio talk show is not a new one. Monohan said a show that aired last year was not successful because it was too informal.

He hopes this year's show, with a definite question-and-answer format, will be a more successful effort.

Buildings to set own smoking policy

BY ANGELA BRYAN

Western students and faculty who smoke may find this semester that their favorite places to smoke are now smoke-free.

A smoking policy was in the works last year but ended up being snuffed out.

Western distributed a survey in October 1991 asking faculty and staff what they think the policy should be.

President Thomas Meredith said the Board of Regents determined each building on campus should have its own policy chosen by the building's coordinator.

Richard Troutman, coordinator for Cherry Hall, said he started campaigning for designated non-smoking areas about three years ago and was met with reluctance from students.

"Since the beginning of this semester, I've seen very little smoking inside," said Troutman, history department head. He said someone moved the benches inside to lead students to smoking areas.

The top floor of the building, where the philosophy department is located, has "no smoking" signs.

Troutman said one problem still exists with faculty who smoke in their office. The smoke drifts through vents to other offices with non-smoking faculty.

WKYU fund drive a success

BY GREG WELLS

Three records were broken by Western's public radio station in its annual fundraising drive last week.

More than $83,700 in pledges was received, the most money raised by the station in the 12 years it has been on the air. Other records broken were for the most new members (more than 571), and the most renewals by past members (more than 1,218).

"We're still a little bit overwhelmed," said Director Dave Wilkinson. When contacted Monday evening, he said contributions were still coming in by phone and by mail even though the drive is over.

Students should take responsibility for campus safety

A dispute between roommates started it all. It ended when one decided to leave school after alleging that she was attacked first by her roommate on Oct. 27, and then by about 20 other people on Oct. 30. She claimed that Public Safety did little to assist her and that the campus as a whole is unsafe.

That's news to us.

The above incidents, both of which took place in or near Gilbert Hall, were unfortunate to say the least. A grand jury will meet tomorrow to determine if there will be indictments related to the Oct. 30 fight. Violence of this kind is beneath contempt, regardless of what might have been said beforehand, and those involved should be punished appropriately.

However, the former student's contention that our campus is unsafe is a stretch.

Students who come to Western searching for a crime-free campus are likely to be disappointed. Crime is everywhere, and Western is no exception.

But statistics for 1990 show Western is relatively safe when compared to other schools. That year, only three violent crimes were reported on Western's campus, compared to 31 at the University of Louisville, 30 at the University of Kentucky, 14 at Eastern Kentucky and seven at Murray State. In 1990, only five burglaries were reported here while there were 69 at Morehead State, 45 at UK and 15 at Eastern.

Most of the time, Public Safety does a good job helping students when they need assistance. The department's responsibilities are wide-ranging and difficult, and the officers should be commended for their work on students' behalf.

Public Safety shouldn't bear all responsibility for keeping campus safe, though.

Students should take measures to prevent incidents before they happen. For starters, they shouldn't hesitate to report all crimes to Public Safety, which is headquartered in the parking structure.

Students should try to get along with their roommates, but if serious problems develop, they should work through the housing office to get another assignment.

Rather than walk alone at night, students should call the Student Escort Service at 745-3333. And of course, students should use their best judgment in all situations.

If all students do these things, the two ugly incidents at Gilbert Hall won't repeat themselves.

Circle K is service organization

I would like to make students more aware of a community service organization on campus. Circle K International is not a convenience store; it is a service club that is also devoted to developing leadership skills and fellowship.

Circle K is sponsored by the Kiwanis organization that is made up of local business and professional leaders. This provides an excellent opportunity to make career contacts.

Through leadership development conferences and district and international conventions held across the country, you have the chance to learn more about yourself and how to be an effective leader and meet people from all over the world.

The Western Circle K is involved with such organizations as the March of Dimes, American Cancer Society, American Heart Association, Girls' Club and the Special Olympics. We are currently developing a fundraiser to support a family at Christmas. It is a great feeling to know that you are one of over 10,000 college students from seven countries who are devoted to helping others.

For more information call 745-3036 or 745-2744. Everyone is welcome at our Monday night meetings held at 8 p.m. in DUC Room 349.

Athletics being unfair to students

Why does the athletics department at WKU continue to move forward on the playing field, but backward in the office?

As I read the Thursday, Nov. 12, editorial and article concerning student seating in Diddle Arena I was appalled at Dr. Mar-ciani's comment, "I'm only reacting to the needs of the student." Although the seats on the floor are a very positive step, since when are seats behind the goal meeting the needs of any fan, let alone the most vocal in Diddle Arena?

I do realize that money is a very important consideration for the department, and the university in general, but why not move the students to Section 112 or 114? I'm sure an opposing coach would hate to have a crowd of Western students right behind his bench.

Coaches Sanderford and Willard have continuously cried for bigger crowds in Diddle Arena, and their teams most definitely deserve the support. The coaches have also said that the key to this support is more of the student population attending the games. The athletics department has already alienated some fans

Faculty should have say in contract

When President Zacharias' contract was renewed in 1983, the Board of Regents formally requested the chair of the Faculty Senate to present to the board faculty opinion of the president's performance in office. A survey of the faculty was held, and a strong demonstration of faculty support provided the president with a mandate to continue.

This year it is apparent that the board is not going to request similar faculty involvement in the renegotiation and extension of President Meredith's contract. We can of course express our views individually to the faculty regent, but the only way we can preserve our collective role in the evaluation of the university's chief administrator is to hold a faculty vote of confidence or no confidence. The Faculty Senate should conduct such a survey in order that our concerns, pro and con, receive serious consideration by the Board of Regents.

Richard D. Weigel
History professor

Editor's note: Dr. Meredith's contract was not extended. The language in the old contract was clarified.

Sexual harassment policy developed

The term "sexual harassment" is frequently discussed and debated by lawyers, feminists, employers, employees, gay and lesbian groups as well as university students, staff and faculty. While sexual harassment may not be new, definitions and concepts of sexual harassment are constantly changing and being revised.

Problems of sexual harassment on any given campus are not new problems. However, traditionally they have been considered by deans, personnel managers and department heads as instances of misconduct to be dealt with in the same way as other personal misconduct. Because charges of sexual harassment are an obvious source of public embarrassment for an educational institution, it is easy to understand why this problem has always been swept under the rug. However, administrative procrastination and inaction on a complaint of sexual harassment by a student of faculty/staff carries greater risk than ever before. It is an alert administration that recognizes those risks and is prepared to effectively offer resolutions.

In its guideline on sexual harassment, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission directs employers to take all steps necessary to prevent sexual harassment. One of these steps is to implement a strong policy against sexual harassment and maintain an effective complaint procedure.

In a meeting with Polly Poore and Sherry Hill (student social workers), Dr. Jim Heck, assistant to President Meredith, indicated that the recently developed policy on sexual harassment will make it very clear that under no circumstances will sexual harassment be tolerated on this campus.

There are at least two forums planned to help facilitate getting the information about the new policy out to Western's community.

A forum on sexual harassment at 7 p.m. Thursday in Grise Hall Auditorium is sponsored by Delta Sigma Theta.

A seminar on Western's sexual harassment policy is at 7 p.m. Dec. 3 in Grise Hall auditorium.

Dr. Joyce Wilder, president of the Women's Alliance group, has indicated that plans are being developed to ensure that ongoing awareness of sexual harassment will continue.

We are asking that all students, staff, and faculty become familiar with the new sexual harassment policy by attending these informative seminars. Sexual harassment is a violation of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Both men and women can be sexually harassed; however, women are most often victimized.

MONEY: 'Cuts have to come from somewhere'

Cuts come down to money

President Thomas Meredith said he wants students to be concerned and vocalize their views to legislators. But he doesn't want students to panic about cuts because "we're not talking about getting rid of programs right now."

When Western ranked its programs in terms of importance, anthropology was at the bottom. Meredith realizes that departments that weren't listed as priorities in Western XXI, the school's plan for the 21st century, are concerned every time there's a budget cut.

"And those are legitimate concerns," Meredith said, but it comes down to money that's formula-driven, and until the state establishes higher education as one of its priorities, the danger of cuts won't go away.

Council on Higher Education members and university presidents have said drastic budget cuts will harm universities in Kentucky. But Norm Snider, CHE spokesman, said it's a problem nationwide, and schools facing more cuts are being forced to drop departments.

At Western, more cuts could mean layoffs and more serious cuts in departments.

Snider said the money problem is tough to solve because "the governor's and legislators' hands are tied."

He said that's because the Kentucky Supreme Court says you can't touch public schools for budget cuts, and there's a federal mandate to improve prisons. So the options of what's left to cut are limited.

"We can moan about it all we want," he said. "But the law of Kentucky says that you have to have a balanced budget, and the cuts have to come from somewhere."

Push for formula funding

Meredith and other university presidents work directly with legislators and with the CHE, which does not lobby for specific universities, but gives advice to legislators and favors full formula funding.

Western gets much of its money from the state. The state determines how much money universities should get through formula funding.

Variables in the formula include the number of students, the number of square feet in classrooms, the differences in libraries and about 15 other categories.

The formula only determines how much is needed, and not how it is used on campus. Before the formula was first used in 1984, universities lobbied on their own for money.

CHE asks for schools to be funded at 100 percent of this formula, but the legislature decides what percent the schools will get.

State universities are being funded at 73.7 percent for 1992-93. The percentage for 1993-94 will be 73.3 percent. "That's bad," Snider said. It's the lowest percentage funded since the formula was developed.

Western's percentage of full-formula funding is 71.3 for both 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Since 1984, the Council has recommended every two years that the schools be funded at 100 percent. The highest that has ever been given was 88 percent in 1991-92, and that was taken back by budget cuts.

Snider said the Council's position "is that if we want to have an education system that's competitive with surrounding states, we need to be funded at 100 percent."

The problem is that the formula projects how many students the school thinks will attend. If more students come than projected, it's a problem for the universities because tuition pays for only a small part of a student's education.

And although the number of high school graduates is declining, the number of people enrolling in universities is increasing. Snider said nationwide more people are enrolling in universities, but not at the level in Kentucky.

"Kentucky is having a boom partly because we are coming from so far back," he said. "When you come from so far behind, the only way you can go is up."

Does the public care?

Snider said the lack of funding over the years doesn't show that the public doesn't care.

"Every poll in recent years shows that the public does care," he said. "At times when the state is in a good financial position, higher education has fared well."

"I think the people of Kentucky are still supporting higher education and in great numbers. But the state's financial situation has hurt funding."

Pressure on legislators

Rep. Jody Richards, D-Bowling Green, said faculty members and regents call him often to talk about Western's needs.

And Richards spends a lot of time talking to the Council. They all agree that Western needs more money.

"Unfortunately," he said, "some of the things that have been decided are out of our hands."

Richards said he's opposed to more cuts and to the ones that have already been made.

"I think higher education is in a crisis not only in this state but in many other states," he said. "The federal government has set so much down on states. The federal government's mandates are hard on state governments. That's one of the main problems."

As for formula funding being at its lowest level, Richards said it's just another problem.

"I hate that. I mean, I just hate that," he said.

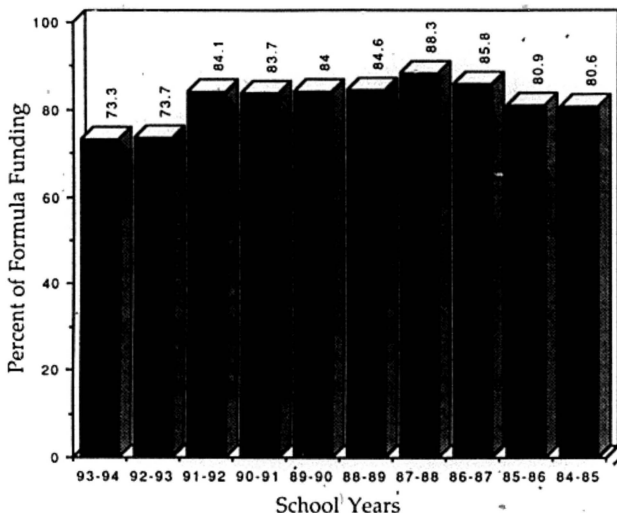

"And any governor I have ever known that has ever run for office has said they would be for full formula funding. But it just doesn't pan out."

Richards said the solution to the crisis in higher education is to have a governor and a general assembly that would make higher education a top priority. And he said alumni should help expand existing lobbying efforts.

Would that really work? "Look," Richards said, "I'm willing to try anything."

"We simply have to raise the level of thinking about higher education and say that it is too important to cut."

Turner says he loves children, and when Sgt. Terry Blanton's daughter Taran, 3, was at Public Safety's headquarters during Turner's dinner break, he took a few minutes to play with her.

After working the previous night, Turner attends his 1 p.m. Commercial Recreation class. He takes the class as an elective for his master's degree in student personnel, a major dealing with counseling. Turner first came to Western in 1986 as a recreation major.

Student in Uniform

When Gordon Turner came to Western as a recreation major in 1986, he had no idea that he would end up being a campus police officer.

Turner first came into contact with Public Safety as a member of the student patrol. During his second year on student patrol he decided that after graduation he wanted to become a full-time officer. He attended the Department of Criminal Justice Training in Richmond, Ky., in the summer of 1991, and began working for Western that August.

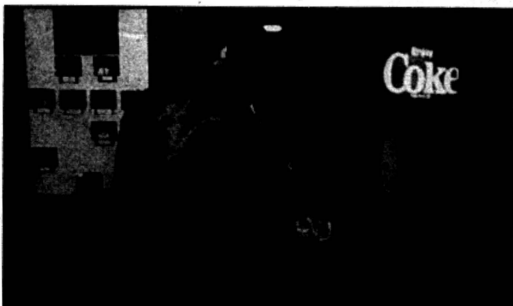

Turner, now 24, says there is nothing about his job that he doesn't like. "I like working with college-age people and the college atmosphere," he said.

Turner's job keeps him busy patrolling streets, checking parked cars for vandalism, serving arrest warrants or stopping motorists for violating traffic laws. He works five days a week from 5:30 p.m. until 2 a.m.

Turner has to balance his work shift against the class he is taking for his master's degree in student personnel, his wife Lynne and newborn son William Daniel. He said his job is made easier because he enjoys working with the other Public Safety employees and appreciates "the closeness in the department shift."

Turner's love of people also helps to make his job worthwhile. "I treat people the way I'd want to be treated," he said.

Heading for the Warren County jail, Turner leads a man accused of fourth-degree assault out of Barnes-Campbell Hall.

Turner checks the license of a motorist he pulled over near the parking structure for driving the wrong way on Center Street.

Marvin Russell demonstrates the theory of the transfer of motion with two wooden carts and a rubber band. Russell, a physics professor, finds simpler ways to teach science to school children.

Learning science is child's play

By C.J. HAYES

When Marvin Russell took a group of physics students on a tour of NASA, he had no way of knowing that one year later he would be in charge of a groundbreaking program that might change the way science is taught to children.

Russell, a professor of physics, asked a National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientist if they had been working on any projects to make science easier for elementary and middle school children. His response was no, but he asked Russell to come back later and discuss his ideas.

Working with NASA and the University of Alabama at Huntsville, Russell talked to teachers in public schools and found that they didn't really understand science, and therefore were having a tough time teaching it.

Russell's project, called Physical Activities for Learning Science (PALS), is aimed at developing the right attitudes about science and good habits of thought in fourth- through eighth-grade students.

Russell develops new teaching ideas and then, through seminars, shows teachers how the techniques work and how to show them to their students. About 300 teachers have attended Russell's seminars so far.

George Vourvopoulos, professor of physics, attended Russell's seminar in Huntsville.

"At no time were the teachers talked down to," Vourvopoulos said. "It was important that they understood and stayed interested. They were all very enthusiastic."

The program uses hands-on experiments to teach kids physics. "The true laboratory is the kids," Russell said.

He puts a rubber band around two wooden carts, which are separated by a ruler. When the ruler is removed, the two carts crash together, showing students the theory of the transfer of motion.

"We're trying to teach them understanding through creative play," he said. After showing them how it works, he lets the students experiment on their own.

"We just turn them loose on the floor and let them learn."

Another demonstration Russell uses is placing a ping-pong ball on top of another larger ball and dropping them.

As the smaller ball bounces toward the ceiling at an accelerated rate, he explains that this demonstrates the theory of the transfer of energy.

Russell also writes poetry about science to help students understand the language of science. One of his poems, "History of Physics, Part II," describes Einstein's theory of relativity.

*He also saw that matter, free,
Was nothing more than energy.*

*Then chose the equals sign with care,
Between the E and mc<sup>2</sup>.*

Results of a test given to two groups of fourth graders showed that of those who had been exposed to Russell's PALS project, 50 percent scored 'high' and 50 percent scored 'medium.' Of those that had not been exposed, 20 percent scored 'high', 60 percent scored 'medium' and 20 percent scored 'low.'

Russell hopes that his techniques may someday be used for introductory science courses in colleges. He has talked with educators about implementing his techniques in their programs.

Political clubs will stay busy

BY MARIA BURNHAM

The presidential election has been decided. The excitement is over. Things are returning to normal, and Western's College Republicans and Young Democrats are not sure what to do now.

"We're in the middle of transition now," said Louisville sophomore Ellen Reitmeyer, president of the College Republicans. "We're just waiting until the end of Bush's term. We don't know what Bill Clinton is going to do once he is in office. I guess we'll just have to see."

Reitmeyer said that she has mixed feelings about the election being over.

"In a way it's a relief," she said. "It was so frustrating for a while because you just didn't know what was going to happen."

The College Republicans will meet only once a month now that the election is over, compared to once or twice a week before the election.

"We'll still be political," Reitmeyer said.

Reitmeyer said the College Republicans plan to do some sort of charity work during Christmas. After working to get their candidate elected, the Young Democrats are taking a break until January, said Princeton senior Eric Griggs, public relations director.

The group plans to keep meeting to work on various programs, Griggs said, including planning for a number of speakers next semester.

"As a group we have a pretty good reputation for having good speakers and forums," he said.

Football revenue to come up short

BY JIM HANNAH

Athletics Director Lou Marciari told the Faculty Senate Thursday he projects a $57,000 shortfall from low football ticket sales. However, the money will be recovered from other areas of the athletics department.

Marciari said concessions raised $8,000 more than expected.

He said $37,000 will be recovered from money set aside for grant-in-aid football players who are not returning this spring.

The remaining $12,000 will come from sponsors.

In other business:

♦The senate unanimously passed a resolution calling for Gov. Brereton Jones and the General Assembly to stop cutting funds for higher education and to restore funding already cut.

♦The senate unanimously passed another resolution commending Student Government Association President Joe Rains and other students who participated in a rally protesting budget cuts in Frankfort Oct. 14.

♦A third resolution commending President Thomas Meredith and the budget committee for their efforts in preserving the budget for academic programs was debated during its first reading.

"I would like to see the whole thing fade away," said Biology Professor Rudolph Prins.

Senate members who supported the resolution said they didn't want the senate to get an image of always being negative.

$14,500 stolen from fraternity alumni fund

BY ANYA LOCKERT

Bowling Green police say they have a suspect in the theft of over $14,500 from Alpha Gamma Rho's Alumni Association fund.

Sgt. Mari Harris said Buster Stewart, a member of the fraternity, reported Thursday that a former Alpha Gamma Rho treasurer had made a series of unauthorized withdrawals, totaling more than $14,500 over the last three years.

Harris also said Stewart has proof of the withdrawals from Bowling Green's Trans-Financial Bank.

The suspect's name will not be released until the end of the investigation, Harris said.

O'Carroll qualifies for nationals

◆ Western's cross country teams posted their best finish in the district championships since 1984

BY CARA ANNA

Eddie O'Carroll qualified Saturday to run for the national cross country title when he placed fifth in the NCAA District III Championships in Greenville, S.C.

He will be the only runner representing Western at next week's NCAA Championships at Indiana University.

O'Carroll finished the 10-kilometer race in 30:10 in what

Coach Curtiss Long called "a remarkable performance."

The finish trimmed 1:48 from O'Carroll's previous personal best time.

"He pushed back some barriers he had tried to get over," Long said.

When the gun went off, O'Carroll took the lead and stayed in a pack of 10 runners that eventually broke away from the others.

He said he knew he had qualified when he got to the top of the final hill and glanced back. "I got to the line and jumped into the air. It was a great feeling," he said.

The finish placed him on the district's All-South team.

He will spend this week recovering from the race and training for Monday.

"It's like going to the biggest dance in the country and I've got a date to it," O'Carroll said. "I don't think as a senior I could ask for anything more."

Three other Western seniors ended their cross country careers Saturday. Jeremiah Twomey finished 65th and Kathleen Clark finished 230th in their respective races while Michelle Murphy led the women's team, placing 55th in 18:33.

Freshman Sylvia Moreno followed Murphy in 127th place, running a personal best of 19:19. She was followed by Catherine Hancock in 162nd, Lauren Moore in 184th and Beth Blincoe in 201st.

While the women's team came in 28th, the men were 8th behind the effort of O'Carroll, Hendrick Maako (49th), Twomey, Howard Shoaf (74th) and Bradley Tucker (102nd).

It was the team's best finish since 1984.

"We're very proud of the fact that Kentucky was the only SEC team to beat us," Long said. "It's indicative of a very strong performance from the team."

Kentucky finished behind men's winner East Tennessee State. Both will advance to the nationals, along with women's winners Wake Forest and North Carolina State.

SANDERFORD: Team still has way to go

BY NICOLE ZIRNHELD

Lady Topper basketball fans got a sneak preview of the team, which is ranked fifth in the nation, during the annual Red-White Scrimmage Sunday.

"I was impressed with how hard we played and how well we played together," said Coach Paul Sanderford, who observed as assistants Steve Small and Christy McKinney coached the scrimmage teams.

Sanderford said he saw some positive things on the court, but the team still has a long way to go.

"Dawn Warner played well for a freshman," Sanderford said. "She had a lot of great passes."

Other newcomers such as forward/center Lori Abell, who was a medical red shirt last season, and transfer forward Denise Hill also impressed Sanderford.

"Abell came back strong for us and Hill did very good on the boards," he said.

Sanderford said the team showed good depth and the potential to be a great ball club.

The red team, coached by Small, beat the black team, coached by McKinney 41-37 in the 20-minute scrimmage. Senior guard Renee Westmoreland led the red team with 13 points. Hill and senior center Trina Wilson each contributed eight points to the red team.

Sophomore Stephanie Minor led the black team with 10 points, with senior guard Kristie Jordan contributing seven.

"Overall, everybody played hard, but I think Jordan, Westmoreland and Wilson were very consistent," McKinney said.

McKinney said all the newcomers played well in the scrimmage.

"They all did what we would expect at this point," she said. "Warner is learning everyday and improving everyday."

Although McKinney coached the losing team, she said winning was not the important factor in the scrimmage.

"We need to keep working and get in better shape," she said. "The scrimmage helped to reemphasize some points we want to make to the team."

"This team is going to have more fun and enjoy each game, and if we make it to the Final Four then that's great," senior forward Debbie Scott said.

She added that the scrimmage will definitely prepare them for the season because it gave coaches a chance to watch them, to spot their mistakes and to correct them.

"Our goal is to win 20 games, the conference and make it to the Final Four," Hill said. "We have a lot to work on, but we look good as a team and we all want the same thing," she added.

The Lady Toppers will open the season 7 p.m. Saturday in Diddle Arena in an exhibition game against the Hungarian National Team.

Toppers showcase offense in scrimmage

BY PAMELA C. KIGGINS

There were plenty of slam dunks and open layups in Sunday's men's Red-White Scrimmage, which was good for the fans, but bad for the defense.

"We really need to concentrate on our defensive transition because we gave up too many lay-ups," senior forward Lorenzo Lockett said. "I also feel that we need to work on our rebounding, spacing on the floor and shot selection. As we continue to play with each other, this will improve."

The white team, which had junior Jason Eitutus, sophomores Greg Glass and Darius Hall, and freshmen Chris Robinson and Michael Fralix, lost to the red team 56-47.

The red team posted a starting line-up of seniors Mark Bell, Darnell Mee, Bryan Brown and Lockett, and sophomore Darrin Horn.

The leading scorer for the white team was Eitutus with 18 points. Lockett and Mee had 13 each for the red team.

Robinson also scored in double figures for the white team. Horn and Brown had 11 points each for the red team.

Topper coaches said the purpose of the scrimmage was to give the players a chance to play in front of a crowd with game conditions, and to run the plays.

Assistant Coach Tom Crean, who coached the white team, said that everyone played well.

"Everybody did some things right and the players finished baskets," he said. "Every area could use improvement right now, but we're getting into our third week of practice and are starting to get some of the wrinkles out."

The Toppers will open with an exhibition game at 7 p.m. Friday at Smith Stadium against Stuttgart, Germany.

Kragh qualifies for diving regionals

◆ The swim team had four double winners in its season opener

By DENNIS VARNEY

INDIANAPOLIS — The swim team opened its season Saturday at the University of Indianapolis with victories over Butler and Indianapolis. The team defeated both schools soundly.

The competition was a dual meet — three teams competed at the same time but were scored against each other individually.

Matt Kragh, the team's top diver, qualified for NCAA regionals in three-meter diving by scoring 323.25. Divers who score 300 or more points in one competition qualify for regionals.

He said he was glad to qualify at the first meet so he would not have to think about it all year. Kragh missed qualifying for regionals in one-meter diving by 3.4 points but Coach Bill Powell believes Kragh will qualify before the end of the season.

The team started out the competition with the 400-yard medley relay. The team of Seth Reetz, Brian "Slim" Nash, Mike Kotmel and Chris Healy took first against both schools with a time of 3:40.27, six seconds ahead of Indianapolis' best team.

Reetz, Western's only triple winner, won the 100- and 200-yard backstroke and the 100-yard butterfly. Reetz's time of 53.7 in the 100-yard butterfly was his best ever in an unshaved meet, Powell said.

Western had four double winners against Indianapolis: Kragh in both diving events, Nash in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke, Healy in the 100- and 500-yard freestyle, and Richard Rutherford in the 200-yard freestyle and 200-yard individual medley.

The team had three double winners against Butler: Nash, Rutherford, and Ryan White.

White, a highly recruited freshman from Boca Raton, Fla., won the 1000-yard freestyle and the 200-yard butterfly. He was behind for nearly 39 of the 40 laps of the 1000-yard freestyle but came back to win in the final lap.

Nash won both of his races in the presence of his family who took time off vacation in Florida to come home and see him.

Nash said, "It is always nice to come back (to Indiana). I was once recruited by Indianapolis." He added that his family's being there "pumped him up" and winning the 100-yard breaststroke gave him the motivation to win the 200. "I swam the last one all on emotion."

Rutherford swam his fastest time ever in the 200-yard individual medley and missed his fastest time ever in the 200-yard freestyle by .005 of a second.

Rutherford has rebounded from serious shoulder surgery in October of last year to become one of the team's most valuable swimmers.

"Western has an awesome team. I expect them to give Ball State a run for the Eastern championship," said Indianapolis Coach Seemann Baugh.

Western defeated Indianapolis 153-134 in its season opener last year in Diddle Pool.

Butler Coach Steve Maxwell said that he knew Western was a good team, and he was very impressed with White's victory over an experienced senior swimmer from his team.

Powell said, "I was really surprised with how we did. I was surprised at how well they did at the intrasquad meet and I worked them hard the last two weeks.

Almost everyone swam better times."

The team's next meet will be another dual-meet on the road against Morehead State and Xavier which will be at Morehead Saturday.

Western will be swimming its home meets in the new Preston Center pool this season. The first home meet is Jan. 9 against Missouri-St. Louis and Union College.
