Kentucky's Top Science Teacher

"We need to get rid of the image that physics is just for 'brains.'"

by Pam Embry Heath

"I can honestly say there has never been a day when I got up and dreaded going to work," says physics and astronomy teacher Doug Jenkins.

Jenkins, who was recently named the top science teacher in Kentucky by the National Science Foundation in Washington, views teaching as fun. "Teaching is the most exciting field I know of," he says.

A 1968 graduate of Western, Jenkins received one of the first Presidential Awards of Excellence in Science and Mathematics Teaching for his contributions as a teacher at Warren Central High School in Bowling Green over the last eight years and for his contributions as a part-time teacher at Western during the last five years.

The award, which was presented to 104 science and math teachers throughout the United States and Puerto Rico, included a $5,000 grant to the recipients' schools and several computer gifts, he said. In addition, the recipients' families were flown to Washington to attend the awards ceremony hosted by President Ronald Reagan at the White House.

Jenkins said the physics program at Warren Central, judged as the best in Kentucky last year, has grown from 11 students when he began teaching there in 1975 to 150, making it the largest physics department of any high school in Kentucky. "I just love teaching physics," he says, and his enthusiasm toward the subject is projected to his students.

"I feel like I'm the first exposure they (high school students) have to physics in most cases," Jenkins says. "I have a lot to do with their general opinions about physics and the sciences in general, and that's important to me."

An "avid" member of the American Association of Physics Teachers, Jenkins says he has learned more helpful information from this organization than any other organization he belongs to.

He is also a member of the Kentucky Association of Physical Sciences, the state science teachers' organization, and the Kentucky Science Advisory Council. He is chairman of the newly formed WKU Science Education Advisory Council.

"If you're an elementary teacher, you are a science teacher as well and you have to rely on the books, which have no curriculum."

Another problem, he said, is getting people to go into science teaching. "The job opportunities are greater and at higher pay in other science areas.

"Physics is the most critical area," he adds. "Most physics majors are gobbled-up by industries and in most schools you're lucky to teach one physics class a day and then you have to devote the rest of the day to teaching something you're not as interested in."

Jenkins says he thinks there are many things which can be done to improve that situation so teachers interested in physics are able to teach two or three physics classes a day. "We need to get rid of the image that physics is just for 'brains,'" he says.

But physics isn't Jenkins' only love. For the past eight semesters he has taught astronomy classes at Western on a part-time basis.

In 1978, when he returned to Western to get his master's degree, he took "a lot of courses in astronomy."

Teaching at both the high school and college levels has proven to be the "best of both worlds," Jenkins says. "I've never taught a class at Western and not learned something I could use at the high school."

Jenkins hasn't always been interested in physics. In high school he said he made straight C's in the subject, and just couldn't relate what he was being taught to the world around him.

"My twin brother (who was in the same class) loved it, so it wasn't the teacher. It was just me," he recalls.

During his second semester at WKU he was required to take a physics course, and for the first time he was interested in what he was learning. "I had a teacher who just explained everything in relation to life, and thanks to him I switched my major and took everything Western had to offer in physics."

After graduating with a bachelor of science degree in 1968, Jenkins did not enter the teaching field. He worked for two years as a research physicist for the government's night vision laboratory, followed by two years in private industry.

Even after winning the highest honor in the state as a science teacher, Jenkins isn't looking to move upward in his profession. "I just want to spread the word as much as I can.

"I try to convince anybody who's good in science to go into science teaching," he says.

When he's not at work, Jenkins says he likes to spend time with his wife and two sons. "I just like to do anything as long as it's with my family," he says.

"I've always found that if something's interesting and taught in an interesting fashion, then people will want to learn more," he says. "That's what I try to do."

BU Alumni Gather

by Pam Embry Heath

"Too many professors and colleges today teach only that known within ivy-covered walls," said "Top" Orendorf. "The BU taught what was needed to compete and succeed in the real world outside. For this we should all be grateful."

For the first time since their alma mater burned to the ground 20 years ago, former students and faculty of Bowling Green's Business University gathered for a joyful reunion.

More than 400 of the university's estimated 4,000 students and faculty from 1924-1964 gathered in Bowling Green July 27-28 to renew old friendships, rekindle old memories and exhibit pride in their former school.

According to Jimmy Feix, associate director of alumni affairs at Western Kentucky University, approximately 100 known BU students and faculty were contacted in May about the reunion, which featured a Friday night barbecue picnic at the home of J. Murray Hill Jr., a Saturday brunch at the Holidome and a banquet at the Bowling Green Country Club. However, by the time the reunion was scheduled, 425 BU associates were registered for the homecoming.

"I have a warm feeling about the reunion weekend," said Murray Hill. "For BU alumni it was a time for fun and nostalgia and, more important, a chance to identify with their successor—Western Kentucky University. Dr. Zacharias and his staff demonstrated their interest in all BU alumni and encouraged active participation in University affairs."

Since all the university's records were destroyed in the fire, no list of BU alumni exists, and word-of-mouth was cited as the reason such a large number attended the reunion. Only those students who went on to complete their degrees at WKU were officially tied to BU, Feix said.

The Business University once stood on the corner of College and 12th streets, where two high-rises now stand. Its purpose was to train the best business men and women. It was founded in 1874 by A.W. Mell in Glasgow, and moved to Bowling Green in 1884 when it outgrew its Glasgow building.

When dwindling enrollment threatened the university in the late 1890s, Henry Hardin Cherry, first president of WKU, took over the university and by adding more teachers and using advertising, BU flourished.

Prominent graduates of BU include the late Wiley Rutledge, U.S. Supreme Court justice; the late Cordell Hull, U.S. secretary of state; and numerous others.

The list of alumni gathered at the reunion in Bowling Green was also impressive, Feix added, with corporate vice presidents, bank presidents and certified public accountants heading the list. Alumnus Larry Shelton, executive vice president of Genesco, was the keynote speaker at the banquet.

Other speakers during the two-day reunion included J.T. "Top" Orendorf, a former BU professor, and WKU President Donald W. Zacharias.

"It was fun, and it was nostalgic," said Harry Peart. "It was a weekend of continuous high spirit. Seeing so many of the old gang from all over the country was great, and seeing they had all done so well gave me a good feeling that the BU had taught us well. We will definitely have to do it again."

Feix said another reunion is being planned for the near future. "Talk at this first reunion was how great this was and how important another one is."

"When the Business University burned, Western took in all its students and treated them as Western graduates and Western alumni. This all worked fine until we realized that there existed a great deal of pride in the Business University that caused many of these former BU students to just stand back and watch as far as Western was concerned.

"But as soon as we mentioned BU and formally recognized them as BU graduates, then they all came out of the woodwork to display their loyalty."

BASKETBALL PREVIEW

by Paul Just

Hilltoppers to Challenge for Sun Belt Crown

Pre-season basketball camp is underway and the tipoff of the 1984-85 college basketball campaign is less than two months away. That spells excitement around the Hill where Coach Clem Haskins and his latest edition of the Hilltopper basketball team are looking forward to the new season.

"We're fired up and ready to get down to business," said Haskins, who will be entering his fifth year at the Topper helm. "Things didn't quite turn out like we wanted them to last year, but we played a lot of good young people. We know we were close to having a much better record. Close doesn't count, but we saw signs of better things to come."

True, the Hilltoppers were a disappointing 12-17 last year and finished sixth in the rugged Sun Belt Conference. But, reading between the lines, there is considerable reason for optimism as the '84-85 season approaches.

First, the Hilltoppers return eight lettermen from last year's team, including three starters. Add to that list the return of 6-8 forward Clarence Martin, who injured his knee after playing only five games last year (averaging 11.2 points and 6.8 rebounds). A Sun Belt All-Freshman Team pick two seasons ago, Martin underwent knee surgery and was forced to sit out the remainder of the '83-84 campaign. However, he will regain his year of eligibility and will again be classified as a sophomore in '84-85.

Coach Haskins and his staff enjoyed their second exceptional recruiting campaign in a row and appear to be on the way to stocking the WKU stables with real cage thoroughbreds.

And, as all Western faithful painfully recall, the Hilltoppers were, ohhhh, so close to completing the '83-84 season with a much better record. The Toppers suffered through an amazing series of narrow losses midway in the year. In one stretch of 14 games, Western lost 10 games by an incredible total of just 23 points! The Hilltoppers were involved in 13 games decided by three points or fewer—the most ever by a Western team or, for that matter, by any Sun Belt team. Hilltopper basketball in 1983-84 was not for the weak of heart.

Heading the list of returnees will be 6-9 sophomore Kannard Johnson, whose 178 rebounds (6.1 per game) is a record for a WKU rookie. And his 370 points (12.8 average) rank as the third highest total ever for a Western freshman. A Sporting News honorable mention All-American and an All-SBC freshman pick, he led the Sun Belt in field goal percentage (.607) and ranked 23rd in the nation.

Also back are guards Billy Gordon (6-1, Jr., 6.7 ppg) and Johnny Taylor (6-5, Sr., 6-4 ppg). Sophomore frontliners Tellis Frank (6-9; 3.9 ppg), another SBC All-Freshman pick, and Bryan Asberry (6-6½, 3.8 ppg) saw considerable action last season, including several starts each, and figure heavily in the Hilltopper game plan. Guards Dennis Johnson (6-2, Sr., 2.0 ppg), a part-time starter and standout, and Mike Ballenger (6-3, 2.2 ppg) should also be valuable assets. Add Martin, who in all probability would have been a starter throughout the '83-84 season, and it's obvious that there is a good deal of returning talent.

Heading the list of newcomers are the two top cage athletes in Kentucky, 6-7

Steve Miller (21.4 ppg, 11.0 rpg) of Lexington Henry Clay and 6-6 Fred Tisdale (19.7 ppg, 11.0 rpg) of state champion Logan County. Miller is the first Kentucky "Mr. Basketball" to sign with the Hilltoppers since Terry Davis came to Western from Shelby County in 1968. Tisdale was runner-up in the "Mr. Basketball" balloting and was the MVP of the state tournament.

Brian Fish (6-5, 20.8 ppg, 10.0 rpg), a first-team Indiana All-Stater from Seymour, also cast his lot with the Toppers. Add guard James McNary (6-0, 24.3 ppg, 12.2 rpg) of Owensboro (Ky.) Catholic High and Tony Roberts (6-2, 22.8 ppg, 7-0 rpg) from St. Thomas Aquinas High in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and the impressive freshman roll is complete.

Also new to the Hilltopper roster will be 6-10 sophomore Michael Rutledge, who transferred to the Hill from Auburn. A graduate of Bibb County High in Centreville, Ala., Rutledge was his state's prep player-of-the-year as a senior in '82-83.

"We're really excited about the quality of our new people," said Haskins. "Our fans are going to enjoy watching these young men develop over the next four years."

Lady Toppers Looking for More

Just two short years ago, Paul Sanderford came to the Western Kentucky campus and put new life in the Lady Topper basketball program.

He took over a team that had gone 12-15 the year before, and with virtually the same personnel fashioned a sparkling 22-7 record en route to earning the Sun Belt Conference runner-up trophy and league Coach-of-the-Year honors.

Last winter, for his encore, he guided his injury-riddled Toppers to a 21-11 mark and a fourth place finish in the prestigious National Women's Invitational Tournament.

Now, in only his third year on the Hill, Sanderford has his sights set on bigger and better things for WKU women's basketball.

"Under the circumstances our kids did a super job last year," he said. "We played one of the toughest schedules around and had to face some good people when we weren't physically able to do our best. But these young ladies really went to war on the basketball court."

In fact, the Western women were never at full strength throughout the 1983-84 campaign. The first blow came before the opening when All-American Lillie Mason injured her knee in a pre-season scrimmage and had to sit out the entire season after undergoing surgery.

Then veteran center Dianne Depp, Western's number two all-time rebounder, hurt an ankle early in the year and missed several games.

Add to that injuries that slowed stellar freshman Clemette Haskins and veteran forward Gina Brown and you can readily see what Sanderford's problem was.

The Toppers lost only three letterwinners from that squad, and with the return of four starters plus a healthy Mason, things look bright for the future of the women's sport at WKU.

"We do have some good people returning," added Sanderford. "But it's not going to be that easy to replace players like Depp and (Cindy) Young.

Dianne, in spite of her injury, was a cornerstone of our team. And Cindy's experience and leadership really paid off for us time and again. She was a great one to have there on the sidelines ready to go."

Heading the list of returnees are Mason, Haskins, Brown and Kami Thomas.

Also back in uniform for the Lady Toppers will be Laura Ogles (6-1, So., 6.7 ppg, 3.4 rpg), Linda Martin (5-7, Sr., 6.7 ppg, 1.9 rpg), Melinda Carlson (6-2, So., 5.9 ppg, 4.5 rpg, 18 starts), Annette Jones (5-10, Jr., 3.5 ppg, 2.2 rpg) and Dana Cunningham (6-1, So., 1.0 ppg, 1.4 rpg).

Sanderford and his staff have added outstanding signees to the Lady Toppers roster for '84-85.

"We were happy with our recruiting efforts," said the third-year coach. "We had certain needs and we were able to find athletes who fit in nicely with our plans. These young ladies should prove to be real assets to Lady Topper basketball down the road."

Crystal Moore, a 6-3 Tennessee All-Stater from Lebanon, averaged 15 points, eight rebounds and 4.5 blocked shots per game in leading her Devolettes to a 29-1 mark last season.

Traci Patton (6-2), another Tennessee All-Stater, comes to the Hill from Hillsboro High in Nashville, where she averaged 17 points and seven rebounds as a senior.

Dorothy Taylor (5-10), a junior college star from Jackson (Tenn.) State Community College, tossed in 25.7 points and grabbed 11.3 rebounds per game during the '83-84 season.

Atlantic Richfield Awards WKU $25,000

The Atlantic Richfield Foundation has awarded the university a $25,000 grant to expand the mathematics department's laboratory to a center to assist math and science teachers in the region.

Mrs. Linda Pulsinelli, assistant professor of mathematics, and Dr. Pansy Brunson, instructor of mathematics, received the award which makes it possible for the Ogden College of Science, Technology and Health to add another dimension to a demonstrated commitment of service to area public schools.

Dr. Brunson will direct the center and will poll area teachers to see how WKU may serve them, such as providing computer-assisted instruction, reference materials and notices of meetings.

The award is for one year.

Page Remembers Six WKU Presidents

"Few people have stayed in one place at one job, but I've never had a regular job anyplace except as a member of the Western faculty."

—George V. Page

Since 1906, WKU has had six names and six presidents, but only one George Vernon Page.

Page, 94, has worked for the university since 1913 and has had the "pleasure" of working for all six presidents: Dr. Henry Hardin Cherry, Dr. Paul L. Garrett, Dr. Kelly Thompson, Dr. Dero G. Downing, Dr. John Minton, and Dr. Donald W. Zacharias. "I don't know if it's their fault or mine; I've just lived long enough to work for them all," he said with a chuckle.

"When I came here in 1909 as a student, I liked the campus so much I decided I'd become a member of the faculty someday," he continued, "and I'm still here."

Page, who received a life certificate from Western in 1914, began as a student teacher in the department of geography in 1913. He became a "full-fledged" member in the department of physics—which he founded—in January 1917 after receiving the bachelor of science degree from the University of Kentucky.

The physics department, formerly a part of the general science curriculum, was developed by Page when he joined the faculty, and he served as both department head and as professor within the department.

"My aim was to make it the greatest department in the world . . . I don't think I quite made it, but I think it's the greatest," he said.

Page retired in 1960 at age 70, but chose to stay on the faculty teaching a reduced course load rather than take a full retirement from teaching, he said.

He says three of Western's former presidents—Thompson, Downing, and Minton—are former students of his as well as former bosses. "I don't know if I influenced them to become Western presidents, but I like to think I did."

George V. Page, center, visits with four of the six Western presidents. Page has served under all six WKU chiefs, and here visited with, from

WKU Gets $65,000 for Disadvantaged Students

Western's Ogden College of Science, Technology and Health has been awarded $65,896 to implement a special services project for disadvantaged students in the medical record technology program.

According to Lynn Greeley, assistant dean of the Ogden College, WKU enrolls hundreds of students each year who are economically disadvantaged and who are first generation college students.

"For such disadvantaged students, often academically underprepared as well, the failure and drop-out rates are high," he says. "With this grant, the university expects to retain a high percentage of the participants and to graduate them within five years after entry at a rate which is comparable to the overall institutional rate."

The two-year Department of Health and Human Services' grant will be used to provide services aimed at "fulfilling the unmet needs of these special students," in the areas of counseling, intensive academic advisement, tutoring, "strategies for college success," cultural opportunities and assistance in acquiring writing competency and basic mathematical skills.

"Western is committed to serving disadvantaged students . . . especially the disadvantaged minority student . . . and it has a comprehensive and well-developed plan for management of the project and for evaluating all aspects of project management and outcome," Greeley says.

TV to Document Poet Jim Wayne Miller

Jim Wayne Miller and his poetry will be documented in a television production by the division of media services.

WKU has a matching grant from the Kentucky Humanities Council to produce the 30-minute profile of Miller, professor of foreign languages and author of short stories, poems and numerous other writings.

Michael Lasater will direct "I Have a Place: The Poetry of Jim Wayne Miller," and says he expects the personality profile to air on the Kentucky Educational Television Network in the fall of 1985.

WKU Professor Searching For Talisman

Barry Brunson, assistant professor of mathematics at WKU, would like to purchase a 1937-38 Talisman as a gift for a parent who attended WKU that year. Anyone desiring to sell a '37-'38 Talisman may contact him at 745-3651.

WKU Gifts Exceed $1 Million

In his annual address to faculty and staff, WKU President Donald Zacharias opened the school year on a positive note by announcing that for the first time in the university's history, gifts to WKU during the 1983-84 fiscal year exceeded $1 million.

Combined gifts to the College Heights Foundation, Hilltopper Hundred Club and the Development Office totaled $1,093,291.70, representing a 40 percent increase over last year.

"I realize that this level of success is modest when compared to some universities, but Western has come so far so quickly that I believe if you and I do our jobs well we will be surprised by the continued generosity of our friends," Dr. Zacharias told 700 faculty and administrators.

He also reported that last year the university received a record of 8,730 individual gifts—a 25 percent increase over the previous year, and alumni gave cash contributions of $42,164.

Faculty, students, and administrators received a total of $37,144 from the unrestricted development fund for projects that otherwise would have gone unfunded, and the university's academic excellence fund, a permanent endowment for special academic activities, has reached its halfway goal of $250,000 with $125,000.

McKinley and Rappaport Are Big Red

Two Western seniors have been selected to portray Big Red, the university's lovable mascot, for 1984-85.

O'Brian McKinley from Elizabethtown and Jessica Rappaport from Lexington were selected during tryouts last spring.

Only full-time students are eligible to audition for the part, according to Ron Beck of the Office of Student Affairs. McKinley will receive the Pepsi-Cola Big Red Scholarship and Rappaport will receive the Jones, Nance and Steineman Scholarship.

The selection process includes a written application, references, a personal interview and an audition to identify students who can be dependable, reliable and creative in expressing Big Red's personality, Beck says.

Big Red averages 50 public appearances per year in addition to men's and women's sporting events.

Ralph Carey, a Western student, created Big Red in 1979 and portrayed him that year. Since then, Mark Greer, a 1983 graduate, and Skip Clevinger, a Paducah junior, have portrayed the furry red mascot who has won numerous awards since he was created.

AACTE Head Calls WKU Education College 'Exceptional'

Dr. David Imig, the executive director of the American Association of Colleges of Teacher Education (AACTE), says WKU's College of Education is "exceptional" because the campus has addressed national concerns of teacher education and has sought solutions.

Imig was on campus to address the teacher education faculty on the national status of teacher education, and he credited WKU with looking for ways to improve the quality of its programs, its candidates for teacher education and for the CE's plan of follow-up for teachers in the schools.

"Today, schools of education are in the spotlight," Imig says. "We must do a better job of communicating to the public what we are doing in order to respond to current criticism of the whole system of education."

"It's a time of inconsistencies," he said, pointing out that even though education has been subjected to criticism in recent years, a New York Times article in June said that the baby boom generation is one of the most educated.

Nolan Donates Chairlift to WKU

John Nolan, owner and president of the J.E. Nolan Company of Louisville, has presented the university with his patented water powered pool chairlift for handicapped and aging.

Nolan, a 1949 graduate of WKU with a degree in industrial arts, made the gift in memory of his father-in-law, Dr. Horace McMurtry. McMurtry was professor of education at WKU from 1923 to 1945.

His pool chairlift is used extensively in YMCA, YWCA and college pools across the country.

Dr. Burch Oglesby, physical education and recreation department head, accepted the gift on behalf of Western. The $1,700 gift has been installed on the pool in Diddle Arena. In addition to its use in physical education's adaptive, handicapped and aging curriculum and special programs, it will also be available for handicapped students use in the university's recreation and intramural swimming activities.

Western Receives $40,000 Grant

WKU has received a $40,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education to instruct physical education teachers in working with handicapped students.

Dr. Charles Daniel, assistant professor of physical education at WKU, is directing the program in adaptive physical education in 14 rural school systems across the state.

A 1975 state law requires all students in the public school system to receive training in physical education, but many physical education teachers graduated before the law took effect, and, therefore, have no experience or training in working with handicapped children.

Western began offering an in-service program for teachers in adaptive physical education six years ago.

Nearly 30 elementary and secondary teachers are involved in the program, which will take two years to complete.

Coach Diddle // Mister Diddle: Motivator of Men

The Alumni Association is pleased to announce the publication of Coach Diddle // Mister Diddle: Motivator of Men, a biography of WKU's legendary coach. To order your copy, return the form below.

About the Book

A coach usually is background. For team pictures, he stands at one end of the back row. But for Coach Ed Diddle, whose career involved much more than the round ball, it is time for front and center.

When young Ed Diddle aligned himself, in 1922, with a young institution to advance a sputtering athletic program that lacked facilities, staff and budget, a boyish love of games did not suffice. Needed were determination, loyalty and vision as he faced hostile faculty, indifferent community and inactive alumni.

Western's coach was a shrewd motivator whose teams wrote and rewrote records, a generous individual whose small salary kept him and his family on the brink of financial insecurity, a guileless homespun Kentucky original.

Meet him in the private and public areas of his widening world—in his family, his recruiting, his coaching, in stories told by and about him, in championships won and recognition attained. Meet a kindly human being, a colorful coach, a multi-faceted citizen.

The biography Coach Diddle // Mister Diddle: Motivator of Men—with forty pages of illustrations—rests on interviews, on the Diddle papers, on the papers of successive presidents of Western, on tapes, on newspapers—on the wide spectrum of materials that recapture a man and his times. From childhood to legendary figure, this is the whole story of Ed Diddle.

About the Author

C. Harvey Gardiner's interest in Western Kentucky University dates back to 1936, the year he graduated from the Hill. That interest never ceased, and finally he has written a biography of Ed Diddle because of his curiosity about the man.

A noted Latin American historian, Dr. Gardiner received graduate degrees from the University of Kentucky and the University of Michigan. Navy duty in the Pacific pivoted on his command of the Japanese language.

Known for his indepth research, Dr. Gardiner has authored two dozen books and more than 50 articles. He has lectured in Mexico, the Dominican Republic, England, Japan and Korea. His radio series aired on more than 75 stations. His works include Naval Power in the Conquest of Mexico (1956), William Hickling Prescott: a Biography (1969) and Pawns in a Triangle of Hate (1981).

In 1978, Dr. Gardiner gave 176 books and 132 reels of tape and microfilm to the developing Latin American collection at Western. His book on Coach Diddle will contribute to Western's scholarship funds.

Research on Coach Diddle // Mister Diddle: Motivator of Men began in 1982, and finally, after hundreds of hours of interviews, thousands of miles of travel, reading the written records and sorting out truth from fiction, the result is the most comprehensive work ever written about a true legend—E.A. Diddle.

Changing of the Academic Guard

by Sheila Conway

His Mississippi drawl is winning. His decisiveness is convincing. He's friendly, easy to talk to. A good listener and observer. Yet in only a few moments with Robert V. Haynes, Western Kentucky University's vice president for academic affairs, you know immediately he's in charge.

On the job since July 1, the former deputy provost of the University of Houston is in command of WKU's faculty, and even though the 54-year-old historian had invested 27 years as a Houstonian, he says the move to Bowling Green has proven professionally and personally rewarding.

Dr. Haynes was selected to replace Dr. James L. Davis, who asked to return to teaching this year after serving eight years as VP for academic affairs.

Western's new VP has an impressive list of publications, and what he terms "a strange array of administrative positions."

However, they've paid off for him professionally, because they reflect the kind of person WKU has chosen to lead its faculty.

He has three books and is working on the fourth. His notes for a history of territorial Mississippi are stacked in more than a dozen boxes in the closet of his office in Wetherby Administration Building.

Who is Western's new vice president?

He'll come from behind his desk to sit and chat, and the Nashville, Tenn., native chuckles a great deal, signaling a sense of humor. And candor. He doesn't hesitate to say what he thinks, and there's a pleasing sense of calm, probably a result of his Mississippi upbringing and a love of conversation that's very apparent.

He also has a love of history. "It's been my life's interest," he says, with a sparkle in his eye. "I love it. I suppose if you were to ask what I like the most it would be having a keen interest in and a real appreciation for scholarship. I try as best I can to keep up in the field, though it's hard when you're in administration," he says.

"I was torn," Haynes will admit. "Coming here meant giving up a life my family and I had established in Houston. I had back issues of seven journals dating back to the fifties. I had to decide what to do with them," he said.

Donating them to the school's library was his solution, but it was worth it, he says. "You can stay in one job too long. A person must look for professional development."

Haynes was educated at Millsaps College in Jackson, Miss., and has an M.A. from Peabody College in Nashville and a Ph.D. in history from Rice University in Houston. "I suppose it was a Southern guilt and my liberal political inclinations," he explains, that enticed him to focus his historical research on the civil rights movement.

His first book is a black history book, and his most recent and most scholarly work, he says, is about a racial incident in Houston in 1917.

A book in between concerns itself with early Mississippi.

Western's VP has stories to tell of his experiences in the late 60s as Houston's acting director of Afro-American Studies "at a predominantly white institution."

Some of those stories are frightening, some are touching and very telling about a man and his ability to lead in trying times.

For a period at Houston he directed the libraries. "The library system was under a great deal of criticism and faced a crisis of management," he explains. Haynes was asked to oversee the $3.5 million operation.

He continues to edit a quarterly journal, The Houston Review, which is devoted to history and culture of the Houston area.

That's another avocation Haynes says he must reluctantly relinquish, but it must be done to make more time for his job at hand.

One of the biggest problems "is pressure on the university and how we will persuade the opposition that we are fulfilling our role and mission, which is sometimes difficult for the public to understand, while at the same time we maintain the integrity of the institution and the integrity of the academic process," he says.

"There are a lot of outside pressures, and we are in an age in which we're emphasizing accountability and quality in education. Those are all good things, but in the end it's the institution itself that has to determine its destiny. We have an obligation to educate the public because we are a public-assisted institution. The public schools have always faced that, yet they haven't maintained the integrity of the school systems to the extent that the university has to, because the difference is that the university is the creator as well as the disseminator of knowledge," he says.

"You can't have that vitality unless we have the ability to engage in free inquiry, and that we must define and understand ourselves," he says.

Haynes says the university will have to look at how enrollments are managed in the future. "There must become a balance between accessibility to the institution and the maintenance of standards of quality," he says. "That is a real challenge, to be accessible to those students who can succeed.

"Some institutions have overlooked that. We must maintain quality and use our resources effectively. It's pointless to have good scholars teaching arithmetic and paragraph building," he says.

"We must have a professional faculty, one which pursues some degree of research, some of which may lead to publication in scholarly journals, and some which may be more practical, some that may make teaching more effective.

"Western has a fine faculty, and we are making real progress in developing our faculty," he continued. Haynes hopes to assist the faculty in their professional development.

From the Director of Alumni Affairs

Dear Friends:

In 1965, WKU's first official alumni publication was born — a four-page, two-color newsletter delivered by English professor Jody Richards as editor-publisher and me as the only staff.

The magazine grew into a 16-page quarterly publication in 1966 with the assistance and donated services of various people on campus.

In 1967 the magazine doubled in size to 32 pages and in 1968 added a four-color cover and grew to 48 pages.

The format of the magazine has stayed the same since then through the cooperative effort of the office of public information and the office of alumni affairs.

The rise in printing costs continues to be of much concern and it has caused us to make decisions to cut the mailing costs by only mailing magazines to dues-paying alumni. That decision resulted in a drop from 36,000 to 6,000 in the number of alumni receiving the magazine. It was a decision we didn't like, but one that was made through necessity.

Eighteen months ago it seemed like a "guardian angel" had descended upon us when a group of professionals in Tuscon, Arizona put together a magazine concept of 32 pages (16 pages editorial copy furnished by WKU and 16 pages of national advertising to pay the cost).

Thirty prominent universities joined this concept with an average mailing list of 50,000 alumni, with Western's only cost being 5 cents per issue for mailing.

That was the magazine you received last year, but it only included four pages of advertising. The company's sales efforts failed this summer and WKU was notified that there would not be a magazine even after we had submitted materials for the September issue.

Our decision was to get something to you as soon as possible. This publication is designed to bridge the gap between our past efforts and our future plans to restore the Western Alumnus to the level that you are accustomed to receiving. We hope to furnish you with Western news at least four times yearly.

We feel you are "good grads" and friends and need to hear the whole story. Thank you for your patience as we work toward future issues of Western Alumnus.

Sincerely,

Lee Robertson
Director of Alumni Affairs
