"ON CAMPUS"

National Higher Education Week Is Oct. 1-8

Across the United States and in Kentucky those of us who share a common major interest - education - will observe our cause Oct. 1-8.

The Council on Higher Education hopes to sponsor a major conference during the week, and material will be supplied to the media publicizing our efforts locally.

'ON CAMPUS' salutes members of WKU's faculty and staff during National Higher Education Week.

Announcing: 'UNIVERSITY JOURNAL'

Western Kentucky University has launched a new monthly television and radio program about education in general and higher education in particular.

"University Journal" is hosted by President Donald W. Zacharias, who is creator of the 30-minute program which features news, interviews and commentary on current issues.

"University Journal" can be heard on WKYU-FM at 88.9, and the next program will be Wednesday, Oct. 5, at 5:30 p.m. and again Oct. 10 at 12:20 p.m. featuring Dr. Kala Stroup, president of Murray State University, and Dr. Leon E. Boothe, president of Northern Kentucky University, as Dr. Zacharias' guests.

The program will be aired over stations on the Kentucky Educational Television Network on Monday, Oct. 31, at 6:30 p.m. See "Coming Up" each issue for listings.

Your Attention, Please...

WKYU-FM will conduct its annual membership drive Nov. 7-12 and is seeking volunteers to answer phones and assist preparing pledge forms. Persons interested may contact Pam Younglove at the station before Oct. 15.

WKU Student Is Du Pont Top Intern

John Mark Chapman, a senior agriculture major from Woodburn, was selected by Du Pont Corporation as their top intern for the summer.

Chapman worked in Du Pont's Chicago offices' research and development section learning scientifically-oriented product testing, and he was chosen from 13 interns for the top honor at a reception hosted by Du Pont officials.

Dr. Luther Hughes, WKU's agriculture department head, attended the reception.

"Even though I was invited because I served, in Missouri, as advisor to one of the internship students, I was most pleased to know that one of our Western Kentucky University students was in that group of students.

"I am delighted to say that, in my view, Mark clearly made the most outstanding presentation of the group," Hughes said:

Arts And Humanities College Prepares Regional Exhibit

Regional libraries will be able to borrow a photo exhibit depicting "Children and Childhood in the 19th Century" next spring from the University, thanks to a $32,226 grant from the National Endowment of the Humanities.

The exhibit will consist of 50 photographs of children from 19th century England and America at work, at play and at home, and is being coordinated by Dean Ward Hellstrom of the Potter College of Arts and Humanities.

Dean Hellstrom traveled during the summer months to the National Archives and the Library of Congress gathering photographic materials for the exhibit.

Here Are Alumni Leadership Scholarship Winners

In case they're in your classroom, here are the five recipients of the Alumni Association Leadership Scholarships for the 1983-84 school year:

Jeffrey Alan Felty of Louisville, Mitchell S. McKinney of Drakesboro, Cynthia Rhea Smith of Bowling Green and William Dell Robertson and Susan Marie Stockton of Morganfield.

The renewable scholarships of $2,000 each are the University's largest awards, and recipients were selected on the basis of leadership accomplishments and potential.

The Subject Is Non-Verbal Communication

Dr. Charles M. Galloway, an expert on non-verbal communication from Ohio State University, will speak at 2 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 5 to faculty and staff in the College of Education Building Auditorium, followed by discussion with individuals at 3:30.

His visit is sponsored by the Phi Delta Kappa Foundation. Galloway is a professor of curriculum and foundations at OSU.

He will deliver an evening lecture at 7 in Room 340 of the Downing University Center.

College of Education Has New Publication

The College of Education will publish the first issue of "The Journal of Human Behavior and Learning" in November, and intends to circulate internationally.

Articles are solicited from Western faculty and staff "from every department," according to Editor Joseph Cangemi of the Department of Psychology.

An eight-member editorial board from the College of Education selected Cangemi to edit the publication for the next three years.

Inquiries about manuscripts may be forwarded to Cangemi, who says four issues will be published by the end of next year.

The Subject Is Women In Science

Recruiting women into the sciences is the subject of a workshop Oct. 7 and 8 directed by Dr. Patricia Pearson, assistant professor of biology.

Twenty-five women science teachers will participate in the Downing University Center and hear lectures by successful women scientists, and panels of faculty from the Ogden College of Science, Technology and Health.

The Atlantic Richfield Company Foundation awarded a $5000 grant to Western for Dr. Pearson's studies on women in the sciences, and speakers will be:

Paulette Lankford, director of technology, Department of Medical Affairs, Humana Inc., Carol Jones, a chemist, Robin Marshall, a production engineer and Susan Korotkin, an electrical engineer, all from ARCO Metals Division in Franklin, Ky., and Dr. Julia Roberts, professor of teacher education, WKU.

Some Interesting Statistics...

Western's new head of the computer science department reports an increase of 16 percent in majors this year over last.

Dr. Donald Henderson says the rapidly growing department had 500 majors last year, and this fall there are between 575 and 600.

Computer science was first offered as a minor at WKU in 1971. An undergraduate major was added in 1973, and in 1975 there were 73 majors.

In 1977 there were 114.

The University also offers a master's degree in computer science.

Black Faculty Increase at WKU

Statistics from the National Urban League and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission report that about 4.4 percent of the nation's faculty members are black.

Western's number of black faculty increased by three over last year. The University has a total of ten black faculty members, and four of them are new this year. They are:

Wayne M. Mason, instructor of biology; Dr. Asegash Tsegaye, associate professor of nutrition; and husband-wife team, Dr. Delanyard Robinson, associate professor of psychology, and Mrs. Barbara J. Lee-Robinson, assistant professor of nursing.

What Do You Think?

The Sept. 14 issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education has a story in its "Scholarship" section entitled "Professors' Demands for Credit as 'Co-Authors' of Students' Research Projects May Be Rising," in which Cheryl Fields reports that "sticky questions," are increasing among faculty during "cold times" of research such as, "How much credit should a graduate student's faculty advisor receive if the student's research project is published?" and "Should the supervisor be listed as an author, or even be credited with 'first authorship' when the student's project is part of a professor's continuing research program?" and "What if the supervisor has provided all the financial support or suggested the basic research design?"

Fields quotes Patricia Keith-Spiegel, a professor of psychology at California State University at Northbridge, a former member of the ethics committees of the American and California Psychological Associations, who says the California group "has received an increasing number of complaints and inquiries from students who believe 'they are being exploited in the process of grinding out publications for academic psychologists.'"

ABOUT YOU

DR. CHARLES V. DANIEL, professor of physical education and recreation, will administer a $40,000 grant awarded by the Bureau of Education, Office of Special Education and Rehabilitation Services to help physical education teachers identify handicapped or low-motor skilled children and assist them in physical education for the students, often mainstreaming into already existing programs, Daniel says.

The award is a three-year grant.

DR. LARRY N. GLEASON, professor of biology, and DR. RAY E. JOHNSON, professor of agriculture, are recipients of the University's first $3300 Ogden Foundation Fellowships to study other learning institutions and gather information that can benefit WKU instructional programs.

Dr. Gleason has visited the University of Wisconsin and studied their work in parasitology.

Dr. Johnson has visited Purdue, the University of Illinois, Illinois State, Iowa State, the University of Nebraska, Kansas State, Oklahoma State, and Cal Poly. He studied undergraduate soils laboratory teaching methods and materials.

Some things they did he liked better than ours, some he didn't, Johnson reports.

One reassurance, he offers: "We're comparable to the land grant systems."

ARTHUR J. KAUL, assistant professor of journalism, was among 17 journalism teachers in the nation chosen as a Gannett Teaching Fellow at Indiana University in July.

In August he presented a paper to the history division of the national convention of the Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communication at Oregon State University, and he will moderate a session on historiography at the national convention of the American Journalism Historians Association at the University of Alabama Oct. 6-8.

DR. FRANK KERSTING, professor of teacher education, received a $3,250 grant from Family Services Inc. to implement an in-service program in adult development and gerontology in cooperation with the Barren River Area Development District.

Ten workshops have been conducted by members of the College of Education and the Ogden College of Science, Technology and Health, and include topics dealing with the elderly.

RICHARD V. SALISBURY, professor of history, has recently had two articles appear in print, "The Middle American Exile of Victor Raul Haya de la Torre" in the July 1983 issue of "The Americas," and "La lucha anti-imperialista de Alejandro Alvarado Quiros," in Annuario de Estudios Centroamericanos VIII," 1983.

CAROLYN STRINGER, assistant professor of journalism, has been named chairman of a committee which oversees Alpha Delta National Honor Society for advertising students, sponsored by the American Advertising Federation.

JO ANN VERNER, assistant professor of physical education and recreation, has been named "National Woman of the Year" by Gamma Sigma Sigma service sorority during its national convention held on campus.

She has been an area coordinator for Special Olympics for the past eight years.

PRESIDENT DONALD W. ZACHARIAS represented the University in special ceremonies Sept. 15 in Austin, Tex., to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the opening ceremonies and the first day of classes at The University of Texas at Austin.

Dr. Zacharias joined presidents and representatives of more than 250 institutions of higher education and learned societies in the United States who took part in the historic academic procession of the UT Austin Centennial Convocation.
