

"Negro Joe" humor

By: Jon May
From: Mathis

②

One night a Negro was walking through a graveyard. An old owl was in one of the trees, but the Negro did not know it. The owl said: "Who-who are you?" The Negro answered, "Old Nigger Joe." Again the owl said, "Who-o-Who-o-are you?" This time the Negro answered a little louder, "Old Nigger Joe". Again the owl repeated the same question. This time the Negro grabbed his hat and ran as fast as he could. At the same time he shouted as loud as he could, "This is old Nigger Joe".

Nelson Moore
Spring May 12, 1964

FOLKTALE: "That's once"

By Dallas Moore
Source: unknown

(3)

A Happy Marriage

Once there was a man who had just gotten married. He also had just purchased a horse. One day he went to town to get some supplies. On the way back the old horse stumbled and fell. The man got up, loaded his horse and then say, "that's once". Then he and his horse and wife started down the road again. Again the horse stumbled and fell and the man looked at the horse and say, "that's twice". When it happened the third time, the man pulled out his gun and shot the horse. By this time, his wife was raising all kinds stinks. He looked at her and said "that's once...". Well, this turned out to be a very happy marriage.

Spring

Nelson Moore

February 8, 1964