No Use Both of Us Getting Killed.... You Go!

A Quarter Century of Life, Love, and War

"While lying on the stretcher, waiting for the first examination by the nurse, to separate the really serious from the merely desperate; triage. I became filled with an overwhelming pride at being an American Soldier. I was sick. I knew my situation was not a matter of life or death in the next few minutes, but, as I watched, men with shredded arms would protest that the man with the puncturing shrapnel wound needed care first. This pattern repeated, over and over. Every man was concerned for the condition of the other man as being more important than himself. That was what it meant to be a soldier for our country."
