Biographical/Historical Note: The Southern Normal School was created when A.W. Mell and Tom Williams left the Glasgow Normal School and moved to Bowling Green. It was originally called the Southern Normal School & Business College, but in the 1886 charter the name was changed to Southern Normal School. From 1890-1892 the school went through a succession of management changes being overseen by H.A. Evans, W.J. Davis, J.R. Alexander and H. McD. Fletcher.

In 1892 the Cherry brothers, Thomas and Henry opened the Bowling Green Business College & Literary Institute. It essentially took up where the Southern Normal left off. In the 1894 the Cherry's renamed the institute the Southern Normal School & Bowling Green Business College.

In 1899 the Southern Educational Building Company was incorporated with a purpose "to promote and advance education by providing essential buildings, including dormitories." (Harrison, Western Kentucky University, p. 10) On November 16, 1899 fire took the building. Henry Cherry rented rooms and opened the school for business the next day. A new building was constructed by 1901.

The school remained in operation as Southern Normal School until the state legislature established the Western Kentucky State Normal School.
