ORGANIZATIONAL HISTORY

Orval O. Burgess, a native of Bluffton, Indiana, operated a licensed funeral home in Bowling Green from 1922 until his death in 1969. Burgess had a number of partners over the years, so the firm went through numerous name changes. He had a long partnership with Otis C. Moody, lasting from 1954 to 1967. The firm had several Bowling Green locations: 240 East Main Street, 826 State Street, 534 East Main Street, and 512 East 12th Street. Like most funeral homes of the period, the Burgess operation offered ambulance service and “dignified, thoughtful personalized service.” Burgess is said to have embalmed the body of Floyd Collins, who died in a cave accident in 1925.

Burgess died on October 15, 1969, and is interred in the Stahl Cemetery in Bluffton, Indiana. Shortly after his death the funeral home closed.

THE COLLECTION

This collection consists chiefly of funeral records for individuals, dating from 1935 to 1969. These records include biographical information about the deceased, funeral arrangements, and costs. Some records are more detailed than others. The collection also includes a summary of receipts dating from 1930 to 1969, as well as financial and payroll records for the facility and staff. Two funeral registers, 1944-1950, include some biographical information about the deceased and funeral costs.
