Why Attend College?

The young man or woman of today is often met with the suggestion to 'get an education.' Of course every one means well, but some of them are not fully aware of the fact that college education does not pay and that the gain is a greater loss in any case. H. H. W., writing in the "Consortium," recently said that there are several good years of college education to be had, but that the ruin is destined to be great. This is a very strong statement, and yet it is true.

Miss M. Mitchell wrote in a reasonable tone in an article, "The Real Value of College Education," that the influence of college education is not so great. Both of these articles have been read and studied, but the influence will not destroy our colleges or our young men and women from them.

Robert Ingalls, writing a quarter of a century ago, made the assertion that college education is a valuable and necessary institution. He also said that if Abraham Lincoln, who had not gone to college, could have probably become a second generation of the great man, it would have been a great benefit to the nation. Both of these statements are based on the fact that America has always regarded college education as a valuable institution.

'Let's not cheat today, and not cheat tomorrow. Let's not cheat the child, and not cheat the society.'

It used to be that boys were taught 8 hours in a week.

His Monument Still Stands

"The man who stands firm will never be ridden down, no matter how high the horse rises," said the great man. "He who stands firm will never be defeated by the most powerful weapon, no matter how strong the power.

After the publication of a letter written by Robert Lincoln, who was a great and good man, Washington wore a great deal of mourning. Mr. Lincoln was sitting in his study and looking at the window when the great man passed by. In the great man's office, a man who had been employed in the office for many years was sitting at his desk. He had been sent by the great man to do some work. The man sat in the great man's office, and he was thinking about what the great man had said. The great man had said that a man who stands firm will never be defeated by the most powerful weapon, no matter how strong the power.

PERSONALS

Miss Grace Hall, writing from Kansas, explained that she was trying to do work at home but was having difficulty. She was currently working on the upper grade of one of the second grade textbooks that were required for her studies.

Miss Adams, another student of the same college, was also writing from Kansas. She had recently returned from her vacation and was excited to get back to her studies.

Mr. L. L. Lamb, a member of the Kansas State Normal Board, was visiting the college and had expressed his satisfaction with the facilities and the education being offered.

Dr. W. C. James of Lawrence, president of the college, was also writing and thanked the students for their support.

Miss Hart, another student from Kansas, was writing to express her excitement about the upcoming semester and her plans for it.

Mr. Robert Strong, a former student of the college, was writing to express his appreciation for the education he received and his desire to return for further studies.

Mr. Harry Kline, a graduate of the college, was writing to express his support for the current administration and to encourage others to continue their education.

Miss Adams, a former student of the college, was writing to express her appreciation for the support she received during her time at the college.

The faculty and staff of the college expressed their excitement for the upcoming semester and their dedication to providing the best possible education for their students.

Dynamic Values for Thrifty Folks
Substantial Savings Without "Sales"

Our idea of "Value" -- Thrift is that we could not really SERVE unless we made it possible for our customers to SAVE WITH EVERY PURCHASE -- rather than occasionally.

We do not believe that running so-called "Sales" of goods purchased for sale purposes is as beneficial as offering Dynamic Values at the lowest possible prices ALL THE TIME.
