A STEP FORWARD IN EDUCATION

Few questions the statement that education is one of the most important factors in the social environment, and a half a century has gone by since formal education was first introduced in the Western world. Of course, this phenomenon growth has been accompanied by a growing need for education. It is not surprising, therefore, that the population of the United States has increased by more than 250 million people in the last century.

The creation and maintenance of this educational system is no less important than the others. We have a school for every child, and a larger expenditure of money for education.

Yet, the general impression is that this expenditure is much larger than it actually is. In fact, the average income of the nation, or certain other nations, is given in the Research Bulletin of the National Bureau of Labor. The average income of the United States amounted to $14,160,000,000. In the same year, the population of the United States was 12,670,000,000 people. This amount, therefore, was distributed among 500,000,000 people, or an average of $280 per person. It is evident that the average income of the nation is much larger than the expenditure for education.

The question arises: What are the reasons for this difference? A recent study by Everett W. Lord in the Journal of Education shows that the differences are the result of a number of factors. The most important of these factors is that the average income of the nation is much larger than the expenditure for education.

The Path Beneath the Tree

By Bert Wachter

There are those who say that education is the key to success. But the path beneath the tree is often overgrown with weeds and thorns. It is easy to become discouraged and to give up.

The Path Beneath the Tree is a story of a young boy who struggles to make it through school. Despite the obstacles, he never gives up and finally succeeds.
