OPPORTUNITIES

There is no royal road to learning, to gaining knowledge, or to the spiritual freedom which marks the true man. There may be corridors, but the inspiration which will light the way to the true man will come from within, and the student himself will have to discover the secret of his own life. The student should strive to make himself a complete person, to be interested in his own development, and to desire to learn what he requires for his own self-realization. True education develops leadership qualities, but it is not the leadership qualities alone, but the individual, that will be developed. True education leads to a love of learning, a desire to know and understand, a love of truth, a love of beauty, and a love of good. True education is the art of living, the art of being alive, the art of being a man.

EXAGGERATED EDUCATION

Could you be a student of your university for six years? Do you believe you have learned as much in your undergraduate career as you will learn in your entire life? I believe that the average student only spends three years in college, and that many of the students only study for one or two years. The average student has no idea of the value of education, and the average student only knows what he has read or heard. The average student has no idea of the value of education, and the average student only knows what he has read or heard.

The day will be observed on May Day, the day of the school and the community, and it will be observed by the school and the community.

TOWARD FREEDOM

One admirable college reform that is making for a better understanding of the college environment is the idea of the college as a community. Over a dozen colleges have taken steps in this direction, and the results are evident. The students are learning to think for themselves, to take responsibility, and to be more independent.
