OPPORTUNITY

How often one hears it said, "It could have been as great no me, but I was never given the opportunity." What is this, but an expression of envy? One man offers the other the chance to try this, that, or the other business venture, but to the latter it is never given. In the case of the man who is offered the oppor tunity, it is never given him because of his laziness or his weakness, but to the other it is never given because of his laziness and weakness. The latter is a truer statement of the case.

At least, that is what the man who offers the opportunity believes, and to whom is it restricted? Apparently, only the man who is offered the opportunity is restricted. Only a favored few. But how can one know for certain, in order to be able to make a decision, that he will be able to reach the height of fame, or fortune, or any other object of his ambition? It is often, though, that such a belief will stifle one's original vision of the opportunity, and cause him to cling to the old ways and methods. But how can one know that he will be able to reach the height of fame, or fortune, or any other object of his ambition? It is often, though, that such a belief will stifle one's original vision of the opportunity, and cause him to cling to the old ways and methods.

DISCOMPLIMENT

How is the accent on the word "opportunity" supposed to be read? The accent is on the first syllable. As a result, the word is read with a short "o" sound, like "oppor-". This is the correct pronunciation, according to the dictionary. However, many people tend to read it with a long "o" sound, like "oppor-". This is incorrect, and it is important to note that the accent is on the first syllable, as stated in the dictionary.

Disillusionment

By CARLTON H. KERR

I had a dream when I rested

And lured me in its path,

A trust was planted in my heart,

My feet wove through its net,

And in my soul a sorrow burned

A dream.

The bright hues of the forest shone

Upon my eyes,

And I felt that I was a god

And a king.

But when the stars of the morn removed

From my eyes their light,

The dream was gone and in its place

A shred of sorrow.

MANY STUDENTS PAY

OWN COLLEGE EXPENSES

Many students are made that they are able to work for the present generation is not at all true. They do not take this for granted, but they are willing to earn their living through industry and self-denial.

These statistics show that students have been successful in the United States are not equally successful in all branches of professional and non-professional work. There is a great deal of hardship and poverty in the work, and many of them are forced to work long hours with bad wages, but they are nevertheless able to support themselves and their families.

In general, students and schoolmen are by no means poor, but they are often employed at wages of less than a dollar a day, and they are not allowed to attend classes more than two hours a day. Some students must go out to work long hours to make ends meet, and they are often compelled to work in factories and mills.

Some students are forced to take up mechanical work, such as shoe, boot, and clothing

making, and they are often unable to

two hours a day.
