Kentucky Building Is Lauded by Stickles

Head of History Department Gives His Conception of State Shrine

By DR. A. M. STICKLES

Dr. A. M. Stickles, head of the History Department at Western Kentucky State Teachers College, has written an essay on the Kentucky Building. During his visit to the University of Kentucky, Dr. Stickles was given an opportunity to see the building and to learn more about its history. He was impressed by the building's grandeur and its potential for use as a center for the study of Kentucky history.

An Authentic History of Shakerism, Seen Few Miles South of Bowling Green

BY HELEN ERINK

As we enter the third decade of the present century, it becomes increasingly clear that the history of the United States is the story of the rise and fall of civilization, the many changes that have taken place in our social, economic, and political structure. But it is also the story of the Shakers, who, in a bewildering variety of ways, have contributed to the development of these changes.

The Shakers were a religious sect that arose in the eighteenth century, primarily in the United States. They were a group of people who believed in the teachings of William Miller, an American religious leader who predicted the end of the world. The Shakers saw this prediction as an opportunity to live a more spiritual life, and they began to gather in communities to work together and to worship in a more communal manner.

The Shakers were known for their simple and practical way of life. They lived in small communities, called "families," and worked together to create a self-sufficient society. They were also known for their artistic creations, such as their furniture and quilts.

Unfortunately, the Shakers were also known for their isolationist views. They were not interested in becoming part of the larger society, and they maintained their own communities, separate from the rest of the world.

Despite this, the Shakers have contributed greatly to the development of the United States. They were one of the first groups to adopt the principles of democracy, and they were also one of the first groups to adopt the principles of scientific management.

The Shakers are an important part of our history, and we should take the time to learn more about their contributions to the world. By doing so, we can better understand the changes that have taken place in our society, and we can begin to appreciate the many ways that the Shakers have helped to shape our world.

CITES IMMEDIATE NEED

First mention last year's story was graduated from the special front page of the 1915-16 season to the regular line-up. Now the story is the regular feature of “The Daily Freshman.”

A great deal of space has been given the Freshman in the last few weeks. This is due to the fact that the Freshman is a very popular paper of the student body. It is read by practically every student in the school, and its contents are discussed by all.

New Year, New Building Near Completion

The new building near completion is the most important addition to the college. It is a beautiful building, and is a great improvement over the old one. The new building is a great deal larger than the old one, and is designed to accommodate all the students.

The building is located on the campus, and is adjacent to the old building. It is a modern building, and is equipped with all the latest facilities. The new building is a great improvement over the old one, and is designed to accommodate all the students.

Christmas Specials
AND PRACTICAL GIFTS

People are becoming more practical each year—they're giving useful presents because practical gifts are most heartily appreciated—more fashionable this year than ever.

It is doubly pleasant to see a gift that you have bestowed being used and enjoyed. To give a useful and practical gift is to know the satisfaction of seeing it at least used and appreciated. To select your gift leisurely is to SHOP NOW! To put it off several days will be too late to SHOP EARLY—and you know the result.

Please get your gift list ready now, bring it here in the morning if possible, and you'll find the time spent in selecting greatly lessened, not to say a word about more pleasantly and pleasant choosing.
