Stephen Lynn King, a native of Calloway County, Kentucky, assembled the research material in this collection into a book in 1997 titled Confederate Dead at Bowling Green, Kentucky and Vicinity. King’s goal was to document the Confederate men who lost their lives in Bowling Green, Kentucky during the Civil War. Most of the men lost their lives as the result of disease: measles, mumps, small pox, influenza, diphtheria, and typhoid fever, amongst others. The book was published as part of Warren County, Kentucky’s Bicentennial celebration that year and was funded, in part, by the Bicentennial Commission and the Warren County Historical Society. From his research material, King extrapolated, when possible, the following information about each soldier: name, rank, company, age if known, place of enlistment, date of enlistment, death date, parents or spouse of departed, occupation before the war, place of birth, and other known facts.
