Herald Congratulations

When any social event receives nothing but favorable comments, it may well be assumed that good organization and fine management go hand-in-hand.

The social committee of the class of 1956, which sponsored the class reunion at Edboor Hall, will receive much praise for its excellent efforts.

The class reunion was a great success and the energy and enthusiasm of the committee members was truly commendable.

We would like to thank all those who attended the reunion and contributed to its success.

HILLTOPICS

by Don Bell

Two years ago, the Fairview Hill community, a small rural community located in the hills of Western Pennsylvania, was facing a crisis.

The community was struggling to maintain its identity in the face of rapidly changing economic conditions.

The residents of Fairview Hill realized the importance of preserving their heritage and decided to take action.

They organized a community meeting to discuss ways to attract new residents and businesses to the area.

Through hard work and determination, they were able to attract several new businesses and residents.

Today, Fairview Hill is a thriving community with a strong sense of community spirit.

The residents take pride in their history and are committed to preserving it for future generations.

The community has been able to attract new businesses and residents through a combination of federal, state, and local funding.

The community has also benefited from the establishment of a community center, which provides a variety of programs and services for residents.

The community is committed to providing a safe and welcoming environment for all residents.

Herald Gives Preview Of Player’s “Medea”

By Betty Spreckly

The next production of the Western Players in Medea, a dramatic tragedy which will be presented at the Met Museum Auditorium May 11 and 12. Medea is unique in that it is the first of its kind to be presented by the Players.

In order to give a preview of the play, we will take you behind the scenes and give a glimpse of the mystic Medea of the Etruscans.

In the Medea, we meet with that blend of psychological and ethical drama typical of our author, Euripides. Medea was the daughter of the king of Colchis and therefore a “woman” in the eyes of Greek. She had had the life of a曈on Witness when he had gone to Colchis as the head of the Agamemnon expedition in search of the Golden Fleece. At Athens, in the king of which he had had a claim, Medea by a trick induced the daughters of the usurer Pelias to cut their father in pieces and boil him in the expectation that he would be rejuvenated as a result. Jason and Medea were banished and went to Corinth. Here, in turn, Jason found an opportunity to marry King Creon’s daughter. It is at this point that our play begins.

Euripides’ Medea is a grim and gory tale of the betrayed daughter of Colchis, who in her stalwart, exacting death from her enemies, her children and her enemies against Jason, her former husband.

Miss Elizabeth McWhorter in the title role as Medea renders a performance that grips and holds as also spells on Inevitable. Obviously the tragedienne will appreciate the fact that it is indeed a place for the Greek tragedy in the modern world.

Gifted with a voice that has a thrill, Miss McWhorter is magnetic, dignified.

the Twins stand. The Todrys

Bob Daniels went the route at Middle Tennosm for only three the big right-hander. After pitching seven innings of somewhat hard ball he issued a walk in the first and then gave up his first home run right at the end of the second. The losing run came in the eighth on an error by the shortstop as he or-med from the quickset.

"Today is a most important one in the life of Western Kentucky State College, made so by the presence on College Heights of the major high school seniors who have come here today as our guests. We hope and feel that it will be a most important day in the lives of our visitors.

We hope that your visit here today will be one of fun and pleasure, but at the same time we also hope that you will leave us an inspiration for you to give some thought to your future. We present to you in an open-house type of picture, Western as it exists from day to day. We suggest to you that you as you see it, then forget the physical Western, but a glimpse of the true college which surrounds you.

I speak on behalf of our faculty, our administrative staff, and our student body in saying to you that the entire string of the entire campus is put together well to welcome you on the doorstep of all of our buildings.

Western welcomes you, Western thanks you for coming! Thence yours,

Kelly Thompson
