New print teacher to be named

The search to replace Jim Ausenbaugh is nearing its end.

The last candidate for the position will visit campus Oct. 14. He is Harry Allen, city editor of the Lakeland (Fla.) Ledger.

Students can meet Allen 10:30 a.m. in Garrett Center, Room 219 that day.

Allen used to teach basic reporting and Journalism and Society here.

The search committee will make its recommendation for Ausenbaugh's replacement about a week after Allen's visit, Department Head Jo-Ann Albers said.

Search committee members are Jim Ausenbaugh, chairman, Jim Highland, Wilma King and Albers. Albers is an ex-officio member, which means she can't vote.

Moscow State Journalism Dean to visit campus Nov. 4

The Society of Professional is well on its way to making history.

Professor Yassen Zaessoursky, dean of the Moscow State University School of Journalism, will visit campus Nov. 4 to meet with SPJ. There will also be a luncheon that day. Faculty and SPJ members are invited.

There will also be a press conference that day to officially announce the formation of the Soviet SPJ chapter.

When it's established, the Moscow State chapter will be the first SPJ chapter outside the United States.

SPJ is also planning on visiting Moscow State to organize the chapter if it can raise enough money.

Cameras invade LaFayette, Tenn.

About 30 students experienced photojournalism boot camp this past weekend when they attended the Mountain Peoples Workshop staged by the PJ sequence.

The workshop takes photo students to small towns for four days of intensive shooting and critiques by professionals. Each student has a specific task — some shoot photo stories and other work in the lab. The result of this work is a photo documentation of life in the town — this year it's LaFayette, Tenn.

A book which contains the picture stories will be published later.
