Chances for campus radio in near future look slim

By JERRY ELAM

Western, which is the only state-supported university in Kentucky without a campus radio station, has been investigating the possibility and desirability of a campus broadcast facility for almost four years.

And, according to a current study, the chances of establishing such a facility within the next 18 months are slim.

The committee to study the formation of a campus radio station last week. He said the minimum amount of time necessary to establish an operational campus FM facility would be one and one-half years.

 According to plans submitted by the University could delay such a move even further.

The committee studying the possible establishment of a campus radio station also includes Dr. Henry Hardin, dean of academic services; Dr. Larry Niel, associate professor of dental hygiene; Dr. Frank Pittman, professor of industrial education; Dr. Robert Rees, director of library educational services, and three students, William Church, Steve Cochran and Jerry Elam.

A motion was submitted by Rees and approved by the committee during last Friday's meeting to concentrate its investigation on three possibilities, with one possibility being to completely abandon the idea of a campus radio facility. But the other two possibilities:

— The formation of a non-regulated, carrier current station, which is not a licensed radio station, but a type of closed-circuit service that is transmitted through the electrical system of selected buildings on campus. According to Rees, this type could provide all the experiences afforded by a commercial radio station and would also be much less expensive and easier to establish. One disadvantage of a carrier current service, Rees noted, would be its inability to reach those not attending students and the serviceable community.

— The committee is also considering the possible formation of a low in medium power, 30.

ASG plans centralized dorm hearing boards

By CARL CLAYWORTH

Associated Student Government (ASG) has passed a resolution aimed at correcting problems with the Residence Hall Hearing Board Program. The program, at Tuesday's ASG meeting, was termed unable to "provide the level of service desirable to the students or the University."

The basic change is that there will no longer be a residence hall hearing board for every dormitory. Instead, three area hearing boards, one for the men's dorms and two for the women's dorms, will be established.

Glenn Jackson, ASG administrative vice president and author of the resolution, said that under the present system complaints had been made that "people who knew people on the boards got away with things."

Other problems precipitating the changes, said Jackson, were not being able to get enough people to serve and failure by the boards to follow proper procedure in their actions.

Steve Yater, ASG president, the ASG judicial council will be working closely with the new area hearing board members, making the "whole system much stronger and more streamlined."

Appointees to the boards will be screened by the ASG Judicial Council and designated members

Elliot Richardson billed to speak here next week

By MORRIS MCCOY

Elliot Richardson, former secretary of the Department of Transportation, during President Nixon, will lecture in Diddle Arena Tuesday, Feb. 3, at 8 p.m.

Richardson served most recently as attorney general from May through October, 1973. On Oct. 20, he resigned his post after refusing to fire Archibald Cox, Watergate special prosecutor. He also served as secretary of health, education and welfare (HEW) for three years before being appointed secretary of defense. He remained in that position before being confirmed as the 60th U.S. attorney general.

Richardson received his law degree cum laude from Harvard in 1947 and, one year later, became a law clerk for Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter. His career in HEW began when he was appointed assistant secretary of HEW during the Eisenhower administration. He became acting secretary of HEW in 1966.

From 1959-1960, he served U.S. attorney general in Massachussetts, and later became special assistant to the U.S. attorney general. In 1964, Richardson was elected lieutenant governor of the same state.

The former attorney general is presently studying the responsibilities and responsiveness of state and local governments.

"ASG will not just be voting for names of unknown people for the hearing board posts, as in the past." Yater said.

Yater also announced that there will again be just one polling place for the ASG election this spring. Plans for up to five polling locations fell through in meetings with the computer administrators, he said.

"The more we looked at it, the less feasible it became," Yater said. To make the process more feasible would be counter to the objectives of simplicity and election credibility that he had aimed for, he said.

Changes will be made to try to make the one polling place, the Downing University Center, more efficient, said Yater. The registration books will be divided into eight parts to speed checking off of the voter's names. There will be voting locations at both ends of the second floor lobby area so the lines should not be too long or block other traffic in the area, he said.

In other action, ASG heard the formal introduction of the committee reorganization bill and then tabled it until the special session of Congress, Feb. 16.

The special session, originally scheduled for Feb. 2, was postponed because both Yater and Tom LaCivita will be out of town.

Yater called for recommendations to fill the vacancies in Congress. The vacancies are two representatives from the College of Applied Arts and Health, one from Potter College, and one from the business college to the Academic Council; one representative at-large from Potter College and one representative from the Graduate College.

Yater said he hoped these vacancies could be filled at the special session of Congress.

To a question from the floor on the success of the Faculty-Student Interaction Program, Jackson said "considering that it is a first year program, it is doing pretty well." There have been an average of eight to ten persons attending the sessions, he said.

Because of the lecture by Elliot
Richardson next Tuesday, Yater said there would be no Congress meeting that afternoon.
Richardson will speak

-Yester said ASG hopes to sponsor one other speaker this semester, choosing from Hubert Humphry, Howard Baker, Sam Ervin or Ted Kennedy.

Extended class drop period performs as it was intended

The extended class drop period introduced last fall by the Academic Council apparently is doing just what it was meant to do: give students a chance to make some mistakes without penalizing them for it.

Stated simply, the policy gives students who may start a semester and then realize they can’t handle the load, a chance to drop one or more classes throughout the tenth week of the semester without failing the courses.

As reported in Tuesday’s Herald, available statistics indicate that students took advantage of the new opportunity last semester, though the exact number is unknown. The best indication was the number of classes dropped with a failing grade, which decreased from 446 in the fall of 1972 to 16 last fall.

There are no figures to indicate whether the option encouraged students to experiment with courses outside their major and minor areas, but we hope this was the intended encouragement of such experimentation, which hopefully will lead to a better-rounded education, was one of the strongest arguments for allowing the extended drop period.

It is true that the policy also can encourage other things such as laziness among students who drift along in a class for nine or ten weeks and then drop it if they think catching up isn’t worth the effort. But we doubt that such students make up a large percentage of the late droppers. As registrar Rhea Lazarus pointed out, the dropping of courses very often leads to extra semesters spent in college, and given the present economic situation only the particularly affluent will want to extend their stay on campus.

If some students’ careers here are extended, however, it can only help the University financially, because their fees would take up a little of the slack caused by the decline in new enrollments.

For the other students, getting in and out of college as quickly as possible is of prime importance. The extended class drop period is a recognition that there will be some wrong turns along the way, and as such is to be commended and, we hope, confirmed.

Students should take advantage of faculty-student interaction

An extremely worthwhile project is now under way on campus, sponsored by Associated Student Government (ASG) and the undergraduate advising office. Unfortunately, it seems to be getting the same response from students that other attempts of this kind have received: little or none.

The project is faculty-student interaction. It offers students who are undecided about a major, or who are looking for jobs, a chance to meet with representatives of every department at Western. The faculty members explain what their department has to offer, and the students listen, ask questions and go away with a better idea of what they can expect from that department.

At least that’s how it’s supposed to work.

In actuality, few students have attended these meetings, and the department representatives have no one to whom they can proffer their wares.

Virtually the same thing happened a couple of years ago when ASG offered students a similar chance, except with university administrators doing the explaining. This was during a period when the administrators were being raked over the coals by many students in private conversations, but they declined to do the same thing in person. The response to the program was so poor it had to be discontinued.

Grouping is an integral part of being a student, and in many cases it is justified. But students who complain about not being able to find a major, and yet ignore programs such as this, don’t have a leg to stand on.

No rights

The moving industry is perhaps one of the largest service communities in the country; grossing over 85 billion annually. Needless to say, the members of the moving industry do not work for nothing.

If, in fact, you happen to be a student at Western, you do not have the same privileges as does the moving industry. For example, when entering a dormitory, more often than not, you are either put into a room with someone who has paid for a private room or are put into a room as a lone occupant. At least that’s the modus operandi with which some have had to contend.

 Needless to say you must move if put into someone’s private room and if you get a room with no other occupants all is well for about two weeks and then after you’ve gotten settled and perhaps obtained a refrigerator, you receive a call telling you that under no uncertain terms, if you don’t move eight floors away into something resembling a pig in a Western mattress will be carted off to some storage room, and only God knows what happens then.

We would like to state that student’s time is as important to him as a van line company’s time is to that company. Therefore either students should be placed correctly on entering a dorm or paid a minimum of $1.65 per hour for any additional moves compelled upon him. Notice please that a student has little, if any, rights in such cases.

Change of heart

Just a note to thank the cheerleaders and the student body for making a former disappointed fan feel like she was back home last Saturday night at the Western’s spirited game with Murray.

Cheerleaders, let me commend you on an outstanding exhibition of spirit and the skill you displayed with your gymnastics. How good it seemed to see and hear all of Western pulling together for their team! I am sure your leadership and spirit helped the teams’ desire to win more than anything else.

I was very proud to be back at Western and pulling for the team with the rest of you.

Please keep it up.

Jail: not a nice place to visit

(Editor's note: Elaine Ayers, Herald news editor, is a member of Joan Kozicki's Social Problems class that toured a part of the Warren County Jail yesterday morning. The following contains her impressions of that visit.)

By ELAINE AYERS

"A prison isn't just a place; it's somewhere you don't want to be." - from "Icebound" by Owen Davia. There are 86 prisoners at the Warren County Jail and they all want out. Their feelings are understandable. Even though the place is in the process of being remodeled, it is a stark structure, inside and out.

There are six bunks in a cell the size of a dorm room. The windows are blocked up and the mattresses (gifts from Western) are too large for the bunks. In the visitor's hall, as in most illuminated areas in the jail, there is a naked light bulb screwed into the ceiling.

One jail official called cell door keys the only "weapons" carried. They must be effective ones. Another more demonstrable weapon is built into the jail. It's the dungeon, a box with a high ceiling, a concrete floor and, as with the cells, no windows.

Who gets sent to this dungeon on the third floor? Women: "If they're screaming and bolting the doors." The administrators see it as "safety." The cell doors on the second floor are 2 feet high and 2 feet wide. The jail, Sewall White said, "You can't walk in a cell door with the plumbing in the way." The women of county jail are "on their own" if they make a complaint.

The law, White said, allows the jailer to confine a prisoner in the dungeon for up to 14 days. The cell door locks are not as safe as the prisoners' cell doors.

White spoke about the jail's accomplishments. "No other jail in the state does the laundry for its own prisoners. We've got a dishwasher and a paid cook. And we eat out of stainless steel plates instead of old pans."

"You don't have to be crazy to work at the jail," White joked, "but it helps." The jail's officials preferably have high school educations because "there's more and more book work to do every year." Ideally, according to White, "they should be middle aged, agreeable and able to handle the prisoners and treat them like human beings."

I dreamed I was a triple thick shake.
Sister Rita

A student like nun other is in for life'

BY STEPHANIE MADISON

She begins her day at 5:30 a.m. with prayer. She takes long walks in Bowling Green. She likes to sit in her window and listen to the birds. And she attends mass daily. These are just fragments of a day in the life of Sister Rita Joseph Jarrell.

Sister Rita Joseph is a student here at Western, working toward certification as a high school principal. Having just completed her M.A. degree in December, this is Sister Rita Joseph's second semester on the Hill. She has received an assistantship and is currently teaching laboratories of the testing and measurements courses in the education department.

Sister Rita Joseph completely resolves the stereotypical nun image. She is an energetic, prolific young woman who dedicated her life to God.

Entering St. Raphael's convent in Louisville 11/2 years ago at the age of 18, Sister Rita Joseph made her final profession in 1970 (which she jokingly referred to as "being in for life").

Her reasons for becoming a nun were, "I wanted the world to serve." "I wanted to help people, to be of service," she said. "I wanted to be a sister to everyone."

The 29-year-old Louisville native realizes that in the course of a busy day, the more religious parts of her life could be forgotten or put off. This is the reason for her prayer at 5:30 a.m.
It is the quietest time of day for her, a good time for thinking.

Her separation from the convent was a matter of concern by some of the other sisters. They worried that the secular world could interfere with her religious convictions. However, Sister Rita Joseph has adjusted her life in such a way that these fears, she said, are unwarranted. Her vows of chastity, poverty and obedience are foremost in her mind.

And her vows as a nun do not hinder her social life. Part of her work, she stresses, is working with people. A resident in Florence Schneider Hall, she has made many friends in the dormitory and on campus. Many times coeds drop in to talk over problems with her, confide in her or just stop by to chat. She says a favorite discussion topic is religion.

Sister Rita Joseph said she had no trouble adjusting to campus dormitory life. In fact, she thinks the atmosphere in a dormitory is much like that of a convent. To her, the principle is Sister Rita Joseph thrives on participation and involvement. She loves sports and an avid fan of Western’s athletics. She said, “I like the live sport over the televised game because of the interaction and excitement of the crowds.” But she enjoys quieter recreation, too, like taking long walks.

But above all, Sister Rita is a teacher. This is the work of her career, having taught in Catholic schools for six years. She is also an observer — an observer of human behavior and teaching has given her the opportunity to understand the motivations of young adolescents,” the class experience, an additional insight to the young adults.

She makes this observation:

“The college students are so aware of what is going on in the world and are close to God. The college student has found himself as a person in in the high school student.”

Viewing the college student as a Sister Rita Joseph said she favored the no-hours policy for students to have their own hours. Although she felt the hours policy was a type of protection for the girls, she said all women residents over 18 should have no-hours.

And in her work with college students, Sister Rita Joseph doesn’t always wear her black nuns’ habit. In many cases the habit, she said, is “a hindrance in the tant to separate the nun’s from those who want to serve.” She referred to the new dress rules for nuns as giving

Director Leonard helps 'Dolly' to 'make marry'

A musical involves many of the performing arts. For "Hello, Dolly" it is the job of Dr. William Leonard to coordinate dance, music and drama into one cohesive unit so that the various art forms complement one another rather than clash.

The six "Dolly" performances are the culmination of hours of work that Dr. Leonard described as "overwhelming and astronomical." The show begins performances Feb. 14-16 and Feb. 21-23 at 8:15 p.m. in Van Meter Auditorium. At that time Dolly will try her skills as a matchmaker and the amusing mixups and music that ensues should make for an entertaining show.

London—city and theatre—versatile for study tour

Morris McCoy was one of the 11 students participating in this year's two-week-long London Study Tour. He has been a theatre student here but regrets his impatience with the theater productions of the city itself.

By MORRIS McCOY

London is a city of versatility. It has a theatrical tradition of excellence that spans hundreds of years. For this reason, London was chosen for the theatrical study tour during Christmas break by a group of Western students.

London's theatrical season leaned heavily on comedy, but it was not the style of American comedy. More often it caused one to smile rather than laugh. "Dandy Dick" and "Abroad person, Singular" were the two major exceptions.

The comedies concerned a quiet pastor's home disrupted by his beastly, gambling, stoker who brings his race horse, Dandy Dick, to his brother's farm. Alastair Sim provided some of the best entertainment of the season with his portrayal of the pastor.

"Abroad person, Singular" presents three successive Christmas masses of distinctly different coopets. Each scene is set in a kitchen of the couple the action involves and the resulting complications are uproarious funny.

The comedies took a more noble role with productions in Sir Noel Coward's "Private Lives" and "Design for Living" with Vanessa Redgrave. Other comedies included "The Constant Wife" starring Ingrid Bergman, "No Sex Please—We're British" and "Crown Matrimonial" which dealt with the abdication of Edward VIII.

The musicals offered variety within themselves and included several of American origin. Among them were "Jeanie, Christ, Superman," "Godspell," "<broadway star singing in America."

The second annual show will be "The Barbershoppers," a musical revue presented by the Barbershop Quartet Singing in America.

By MARCO COOY

The barbershop quartet style of the past comes to Western tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Van Meter Auditorium.

The main show consists of a 33-member chorus that calls itself the Canadian Chorus. It is members are with the YMCA Camp of the University of Western and the Institution of Logopedics in Wichita, Kan.

Sketches are included for a family package with portions of the proceeds going to the Institute of Logopedics in Wichita, Kan.

Sunday marks the beginning of the second annual show in the Art Gallery of the Ivan Wilson Center. The gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday. The exhibition will continue through Feb. 15.

Grad classes extended to Owensboro

By LEE MARTIN

Graduate students in Owensboro are now able to take graduate classes in their own city through the Owensboro Graduate Consortium, a part of Western's extended campus program. The program started three years ago between two colleges, Brescia and Kentucky Wesleyan, and do not offer graduate classes. As the result of student demand and some initial enthusiasm of the part of Western, Owensboro agreed to provide the needed classes. Although Western, Brescia and Wesleyan all help run the program and provide the staff, Brescia and Wesleyan cooperate in providing the facilities and library services.

Bill Weaver of the graduate dean's office said 800 students currently are enrolled in the 24 classes being offered. Most of the faculty comes from the Western campus. The classes meet once each week.

 Weaver explained that because of the consortium arrangement, Western is able to plan for the needs of the students and offer a good variety of classes and subjects. Although most students have to spend some time on the main campus to fulfill degree requirements, the extended program allows them to finish the majority of their work close to home.

Dr. Carl Cedric, dean of the Brescia Green Community College and continuing education coordinator, said the Owensboro Consortium has worked out well for both the students and Western. The Owensboro business community has worked closely with Western in areas such as raising revenue and planning programs, Cedric said. In fact, one of the earliest graduate programs, the business administration program, was initiated by a group of Owensboro businessmen, Cedric added.

Owensboro residents have been pleased with success of the program, Cedric said. Because of the demand for graduate classes in the Owensboro area, city residents have sent a proposal to Gov. Wendell Ford, asking for permanent funding for the program by the state. If the funding is granted, it will help to insure continued classes for the students of the western Kentucky city.

Humanities Semester plan to include several requirements in one program

By JAMES REYNOLDS

The aim of the Humanities Semester is not to make students better rounded individuals, but to make students better at learning. So says Dr. Drew Harrington, coordinator of the new humanities program, which begins on a trial basis in the fall of 1974.

The Humanities Semester is a plan to combine the general education requirements in the humanities area into one semester. Harrington said students taking this program would have three and one-half weeks each on history, the fine arts, literature and philosophy, with a seminar running throughout the semester.

Harrington said the program would cover the four epochs of man, although the pilot program scheduled for the fall semester would cover only one epoch of ancient Greece and Rome.

The Humanities Semester is the brainchild of Dr. Paul Corts and Dr. Robert Mounce, who submitted the proposal for the project to the National Endowment for the Humanities in Washington, D.C.

Corts and Mounce received a planning grant of $30,000, to be matched by the University, “to plan and implement” a pilot program.

Corts and Mounce were named co-directors of the project, and in turn named Harrington to be coordinator.

Harrington said the pilot program would begin toward incoming freshmen, with 18 to 25 students chosen from about 100 applications.

The students would be introduced to innovative teaching methods in the new Humanities Semester. Harrington said, adding that “considerable work would be required by those taking the program.”

Harrington said he is hopeful that the full humanities program would be underway by the fall semester of 1975.

The title of the course starting this fall is “Man’s Search for Vahaa,” which Harrington described as “showing how ancient Greeks and Romans were not an entity unto themselves.”

Harrington believes the only other university using such a program is the University of Denver, but he said that program is more elaborate, encompassing both graduates and undergraduates.

Harrington added the modular system proposed for the Humanities Semester is in use on an entire campus, Colorado College, where all courses are three and one-half weeks, with each student taking one course at a time.

Several consultants will be brought in to explain the program to faculty members from all departments. The first, Dr. Edward Shubin of the University of Pittsburgh, will speak at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday in Room 105 of Garrett Conference Center on “Current Developments in Innovative Education.”

He will cover several new teaching techniques, including the method to be used in the Humanities Semester.

Proposal would lower senior hours

By TOM CAUDILL

The Academic Council yesterday gave first reading approval to a proposal that would lower the number of hours of upper division courses required for a student to graduate.

Currently, 45 hours of upper division courses (300 and 400) are required for graduating, but the Committee on Degree Requirements has recommended that “32 hours would be more in line with the current course numbering system at WKU.” The 45-hour minimum was established to comply with the old course numbering system, under which 200 level courses were considered to be upper division.

In recent years, many students have found it difficult to meet the 45-hour requirement, but exceptions to the policy have been numerous and most of the students have been allowed to graduate.

Dr. Ronnie Sutten told the council that students following the Arts and Sciences curriculum in particular, have had difficulty meeting the requirement.

The campus goes to the GIs at WKU Eagle PREP

By JIM GRIEBSCH

Building 2136, near the corner of 12th and Indiana, in Ft. Campbell, does not look impressive, nor does it look much different from the other white-painted ex-barracks on either side of it. However, there is some interesting work being done there every week.

The old building is home of Western’s Eagle PREP, and about 200 enlisted Army men study there four hours a day, two days a week, brushing up on old, forgotten skills, or learning new skills, such as reading comprehension, mathematics, English, history, science and government.

In this school the teachers are the only ones who commute. Of the nine instructors, seven travel 50 to 90 miles a day, one way, to teach there.

Eagle PREP (Pre Release Education Program), was set up by the Veterans Administration in cooperation with Western, Austin Peay University, Murray State, Hopkinsville Community College, Tennessee State, University of Tennessee at Nashville, and the Ft. Campbell Independent School.

Each of these schools maintains its own branch, set up in a building similar to 2136, and each furnishes its own staff. The Veterans Administration foots the bill for each student, without taking away any of his G.I. Bill benefits, after he leaves the service.

The teaching done here utilizes the most contemporary methods, including individualized test and worksheets, reading machines, and as much one-on-one teaching as possible with a minimum of lectures.

Last fall, four of the staff felt that their existing books did not cover their problems concisely enough, and wrote their own text, “Essentials of Mathematics,” which allowed them more time to work with their students by giving better explanations.

As instructor Eric Smith explained, “We wrote it because we felt we were in a unique position, with unique students, and unique material. We wanted

Instead of Frank Cannon or Archie Bunker, the student follows a lighted area across the screen, getting a quick glance of a word or a group of words as he completes the story. Perhaps the best part of the lighted word technique is that it teaches a steady, consistent rate of reading.

The machine tries to eliminate this, and tries for an 80 per cent comprehension score on the 16-questions that takes the student taken after his reading.

The PREP program is apparently getting more popular on base, because each new group, or cycle, gets larger. The first group to complete the six months course had 125 students at the start. Last fall, there were almost 200, and now more than 200.

For the instructors, Smith, Sims, and Muffett in mathematics, Pat Benningfield, Bill Greenwel, and Mike Baizin, English; and Pearse, Gerri Combs, and Dick Etheridge, communications, arts, the days have gotten longer, the classes larger. But each of them tries to find more time for individual students, give more detailed instructions where needed, and are able to help slower learners along.

When time permits, the instructors try to set up mini courses for the more interested, more qualified student, with a direct attempt at helping the man get ready for college.

As Sgt. Roderick Clark of Birmingham, Ala., put it, “I think it’s a pretty good program. I’ve learned a few things. It’s like a refresher course. It should be an all day course instead of a half day course. But you still get to do your duties. If you have a field problem, they cancel the school.”

Private First Class Paul Chanier of Ontario, Canada echoed, “It’s a really good school...Got a lot to it...Pretty good refresher course.”

School secretary Sybel Sherrill, wife of a career officer, thinks that the school is “a great thing...the best the Army’s come up with in a long while.”

The instructors are hopeful. As Faye Muffett put it, “I wouldn’t drive 190 miles a day just to agonize myself.”
Swimmers face stiff challenges

By RICHARD ROGERS

Western’s swimming team has a lot on its mind as it travels to Illinois for meets today and tomorrow. One is a world-class girl swimmer, another is a record and yet the biggest load on the team’s mind is its hopes of an undefeated season.

The world-class girl is Marcia Morrow, a member of Millikin University’s team which the Hilltoppers compete against at 7 tonight in Decatur, Ill.

The record is most consecutive wins by a Hilltopper swimming squad. When the Western swimmers defeated Evansville 74-50 last Saturday, they tied the record of six consecutive wins set in 1971.

The threat to their hopes of an undefeated season in Eastern Illinois University, ranked as the No. 1 college division team in the country. Western will face the Panthers at 2 p.m. tomorrow in Charleston, Ill.

“Millikin University has an outstanding swimming team, but they’re not in the same class as Eastern Illinois,” explained Hilltopper coach Bill Fowell.

“Eastern Illinois will be a very big threat to our hopes of an undefeated season this year.”

But first, Western will be going for the record of seven consecutive wins tonight against Millikin. This will be the Hilltoppers’ first meet ever with Millikin.

Millikin coach Carl Johansson and Fowell have decided to swim some different distances than the ones in the 1-mile team event.

“Johansson wants to qualify some of his swimmers for the college division nationals and I’m sure that Millikin will aim for the American women’s record in the 100-yard breaststroke.”

News is good for two gridders, but no news isn’t so good for two others

By LEO PECKENPAUGH

Though two fewer than expected, a couple of Western football standouts received the word they had been hoping for when the National Football League held its college draft Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mike McCoy and Clarence Jackson went in the eighth and 16th rounds, respectively, in the draft, which brought a sigh of relief to both. However, two of their teammates, receiver Porter Williams and offensive guard Dave Nollner, nervously waited through the final rounds Wednesday, neither to receive word of his selection.

McCoy, who was selected by the Houston Oilers, was notified at one o’clock the day he was drafted and, according to the 60, 170-pounder, “(they’re the two coaches he talked to) sounded really happy.

They wanted to know who my agent was so they could get in contact with him and the coaches tried to convince me that I have no trouble playing for them,” he said yesterday.

For the speedy Louisianan native, it may be the chance of a lifetime since the collar-dwelling Oilers are in dire need of defensive backs.

“Porter’s” size (5-10, 170-pounds) really hurt him,” said Missouri Southern coach Mike Thompson. “He demonstrated he can play, though, in the playoffs.”

“I’d say it’s possible,” he said.

“Porter was the best receiver I had to defend all season (in practice). Carr (Louisiana Tech) and Roger Carr who went in the first round with the Baltimore Colts) was pretty good, but he wasn’t the deep threat Porter was.”

With his left arm in a sling from post-season shoulder surgery, Nollner was a bit surprised. He was making plans, however, to get a tryout or sign as a free agent. “I was just over at the coaches’ offices and told them that as soon as the scouts start picking up, I’ll be signing free agents to throw my name in the hat. I wanna play.”

The Western standout surprise in the OVC was Murray’s Bill Parcell. The 64, 220-pound tight end, thought by most to be the finest pro prospect in the league, also was overlooked in the draft.

Toppers hope to sack Raiders, upset the wild OVC race again

By LEO PECKENPAUGH

If you’ve been strolling through Diddle Arena this week and have noticed that instead of working on some typical strategies for tomorrow’s game at Middle Tennessee, Coach Jim Richards and his assistants have been busy packing groceries.

No, Middle Tennessee’s plush new Murphy Center (capacity 11,000) isn’t exactly what you’d call the nearest thing in the world to an A & P supermarket. But, says Richards, “Jiminy Earle (the Hilltopper head coach) said that if they beat Murray at Murray Monday night that everyone else had just as well pack ‘em up. We’ve been getting a lot of practice on that this week.”

The Raiders are atop the Ohio Valley Conference this week with a 4-2 loop record. They’re tied with three other teams, however, for the lead.

It’s not likely the Hilltoppers will upset the Raiders, though, since the Raiders are 9-1 on the glossy new hardwood in Murfreesboro. They’re on a roll.

“Uh-huh,” says the cautious Richards; “there is a wet spot in the floor of the Diddle Arena. Ask your friend,” he continued, “there is”.

Well, for Richards and his road-weary quintet, you almost have to hope so. Counting Saturday, the last five games have been on the road. And, four of those five games have been on the road. But they’ve got the fever in Blue Raider land this year, a feeling that seldom occurs during the winter months.

The season lies in the hands of Earle, who has landed “the best talent in the league,” according to Richards and several other OVC coaches. Earle’s romping Raiders won their first game on the road last month at Murray 74-71, although they did beat Nebraska in the Vanderbilt Invitational back in December.

What coach feared—Middle winning on the road—could settle the mad scurry that is now taking place in the valley. If Earle can win with his team on the road, it will be all over. But that seems to be the mystery of this eight-team dogfight.

With MTSU possessing the most depth of any of the five contesting teams, they’ve been shocked for the Toppers when they take the floor Saturday.

First, the so-called favored Topper will face a team that Richards feels will be “very good” for his team to play its regular 1-3-1 defense.

“They have outstanding perimeter shooters,” Richards pointed out. “They have a good big one in the middle (first-team All-OVC).”

Earle has one of the league’s finest frontlines with a pair of 6-6 forwards in Jimmy Powell (35.3) and junior center transfer George Serrell (13.4 points and 10.5 rebounds).

The husky Serrells hit at 12.8 points per game with an 8.5 rebounding average.

Another forward, 6-7 Steve Poister, started last year and hits at a 10.2 clip in a reserve role.

The Raiders’ other guard, 6-0 Fred Alliachs leads the team with a 16.8 average.

Western has been “doing so many things so much better,” says Richards. That was obvious in their weekend performances.

The overtime win over Murray was exciting, and the one-point loss to Austin Peay Monday easily could have gone the other way.

Standing at 8-4 and 2-4 in the OVC, looks pretty dusty for the Topper. “We’re 10-4,” says Richards, “and it’s nice to see MTSU struggling a bit.”

Winning recipe:
Baker cooks with four scholarship players mixed liberally with walk-ons

By DON COLLINS

Two separate factions have helped the Topper junior varsity win eight of its 10 games this season, including seven in a row at one point.

On one hand, there are the scholarship players, those who the guys, usually big stars on their high school teams, that have been recruited for the varsity.

Their counterparts are the non-scholarship players, guys who don't receive any financial aid of any kind. These players are out for the team only because they love basketball, because there isn't that much glory in playing before a handful of fans, most of whom come only because they don't have anything to do before the varsity contest.

Coach Ralph Baker and his two assistant coaches have blended these two combinations into one of the better junior varsity squads in the area.

OVC basketball returns to TV for five-week run

The OVC basketball “Game of the Week” will return for its second season of televising tomorrow at noon (Central Daylight Time) with the Tennessee Tech at Bonnlo game, originating from Johnson City, Tenn.

MM Productions, Inc., headed by the former Bonnlo basketball instructor Marvin Mews, will produce the broadcasts, which will run through the next five Saturdays.

Mews, the originator of the series, has an extensive background in commercial television and TV sports productions, having worked as associate producer for CBS Sports for the Super Bowl, including this year's Super Bowl in Houston. Last spring he was a CBS associate producer for the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes.

The OVC network will consist of 10 stations, including Bowling Green's WBKO, Channel 13.

Tomorrow's contest will be followed by the Austin Peay at Eastern-Kentucky game on Feb. 9. On Feb. 16, Western will host Morehead and the final scheduled game will be Murray at Middle on Feb. 23.

A wild card game will be telecast on March 2 with the game most significant in the final standings likely to be telecast.

Sports director of WVLK radio in Lexington, Ralph Hacker, will be the play-by-play announcer. Murray men's coach Benny Purcell will assist Hacker as game analyst.

Baker reserved much of his praise for Mike Gilbert, the big 6-9 center on the team. Gilbert didn't begin playing ball until he was a junior in high school and Baker feels he is just coming into his own. “We anticipate Mike being a big man for us in the OVC,” stated Baker. “Mike is the only one who can control his limits. He is a great example of a freshman player by the way he keeps improving from game to game.”

Baker expressed the admiration he has for both the scholarship players and the walk-ons by commenting, “This team could lose all its remaining games, which they won't, and the graduate assistants and I would still be proud of the way they have played ball for us this season.” He added, “I wish our varsity boys had the kind of attitude our Jayvee walk-ons do.”

Western coeds are looking for win

By WESTERN

“We just hope we can do our best and be able to come out on top,” stated Western women's basketball coach Pam Dickson, in discussing her girls' chances of winning either of their games this weekend against Kentucky State and Eastern.

Western faces the Thoroughbreds in a Friday evening contest in Frankfort and travels to Richmond Saturday to do battle with the Colonels.

The Topper coeds are 0-3 to date this season and are hoping to break into the win column this weekend.

Dickson has altered her lineup again in hope of finding the right combination to victory. She plans to start Patty Sutherland, Tonya Dillon, Cecilia Dixon, Bonnie Owens and Leslie Cole against the Thoroughbreds and if all goes well the same quintet will start at Eastern.

“Our shooting has improved in practice this week so we're hopeful of correcting our poor showing against Murray,” said the coach, who has yet to lose her optimism despite the winless season. Murray clobbered the Tops, 64-38, in last Saturday's game.

According to Miss Dickson, Kentucky State employs a running game and plays a man-to-man defense. Taking this into consideration, she said that she planned to have her girls use a lot of picks and screens to break open for shots.

In Eastern, the Topper will face one of the state's premier women's outfits. The Colonels took the state crown last year and many people feel they will walk off with the honors again this year.

Eastern starts two freshmen, two sophomores and a junior. The team has a tall lineup with Bernice Kuk, a 6-2 sophomore, and Marcia Museler, a 5-9 freshman, being the tallest. Eastern plays a zone defense. Miss Dickson will try to counter this by having her girls slow the ball down and work for the open slot.
Kolker and track: they’ve been together a long time

By FRED LAWRENCE

When he was in the third grade, Lloyd Kolker, Western's assistant track coach, built a track on his father's farm just outside his hometown of LeMars, Iowa. He's been involved in the sport ever since.

"I can't remember how I got interested in it," said the 28-year-old bachelor. "because it's been so long that it seems I've always been in it." Kolker joined Western's coaching staff last fall.

He said track "was a pretty big sport" in Iowa and the surrounding area. "It was very competitive," he said. "But competition doesn't mean it had the quality that I think Western's tradition is well known and followed by people in Iowa and many other parts of the nation." Kolker said he became familiar with Western's track program as a freshman in college. Sprinng was his forte as a competitor, but he has also competed in field events. He competed in the 100, 220, 440-yard dashes, the pole vault, long jump and high jump. Soon, though, he dropped the field events and concentrated on the sprints.

He recorded personal bests of 9.5 for the 100, 21.4 for the 220 and 47.1 for the 440. He won the state championship both indoor and outdoor in the 440 his senior year in high school. Football was his second sport in high school.

Kolker attended Western State College (Iowa) from 1963-67 and South Dakota State University, where he was a graduate assistant track coach. Following that, he taught in the public school system in Sioux Falls, S.D. and assisted in the coaching of track and field at Sioux Falls College where he was hired the following year as full-time track coach. He spent four years there before coming to Western. He has had a total of six years' experience coaching on the college level.

Coming to Western was "definitely a very strong move up," even though he is now an assistant coach rather than head coach, said Kolker. He said he came to Western because of its high-national ranking in track and field and because he had known head coach Jerry Bean when Bean was at Hastings (Neb.) College.

During his stay at Sioux Falls, he took the last-place team in the conference and brought it to the top in four years. Starting with a 12-man squad and almost no equipment (and no track), he developed a team of 31 men and won the conference his last year there.

During that time 25 outdoor school records were broken "at least twice" and 24 indoor records were broken. In cross-country, he took a part-time squad and built them into a 12-man team which was second in the conference. Kolker produced an All-American in the high jump and had two-mile walker who ranked fourth in the nation.

"The first thing you need in coaching is a good working relationship with the men. I think once you have the good working relationship you have to work toward a top squad. When I was at Sioux Falls and when I came here I didn't change my philosophy. It is coaching to win."

Looking toward the upcoming season and the immediate future of track at Western, Kolker said, "I think we can stay on top of it. I don't think there is any doubt in it. I think this tradition of being a national power is becoming more solid. We're placing right up there in cross-country. And I think this quality draws more quality to the team."

Kolker said he felt the Tripper tracksters would do very well indoor in the nationals, but would have "a harder time" outdoor nationally.

"To be good (as an athlete)," said Kolker, "you have to work hard. To build a good team, you have to work hard."

Lloyd Kolker wants to be part of a good team.

Indoor track season begins with meets at Cleveland, IU

By FRED LAWRENCE

Topper track face hopes that Robert Dudley, a junior college transfer, runs the same way the rest of the season as he did Monday in the Philadelphia Classic.

Dudley finished third in the 60-yard dash with a time of 6.3 just behind world-renowned sprinter, Herb Washington's winning effort of 6.2.

Tommorrow, Dudley, Robert Ware and Leslie Siler will run in Cleveland, Ohio for a Knights of Columbus indoor track meet. Dudley and Ware will be in the 50-yard dash with DeFreeze running 600 yards. All three athletes are from the Cleveland area.

Head track coach Jerry Bean will accompany the trio and use the opportunity for recruiting. He said that there were a trio of athletes in Cleveland that he was interested in.

Meanwhile, most of the indoor traveling squad will be in Bloomington, Ind. for the Indiana Relays. Assistant track coach Lloyd Kolker will accompany this group. Bean said that many of the athletes going to IU were ones who had a chance of going to the NCAA indoor meet.

Also going to the Indiana meet are a couple of athletes who are hoping to perform well enough to get an invitation to next week's Macao-Dixon game in Louisville, said Bean.

Competition at both Cleveland and Indiana is expected to be very tough, according to Bean. At Cleveland, Western's sprinters will be taking on two Olympic medalists in Gerald Tindley and Laverne Drifles. In 600, will be up against last year's NCAA third place finisher, Bob Caseleman.

As for the competition at Indiana, Bean said, "Tennessee may be there, Alabama for sure, Indiana State, Bell State, Kentucky, and Eastern Kentucky to name a few. I think there'll be about 15 schools."

Competing for Western at IU will be Jerry Ammerman and Bobby Payne in the 70 high hurdles; Leo Fain in the 440; Virgil Livers and Dwight Grooms in the 60-yard dash; Bobby Sandiche in the pole vault; Chuck Durrant in the high jump; Jack Wilcox in the shots put; David Jaggers and Swat Hartel in the 1,000 yard run; Donald Thornton in the 600-yard run; Nick Ross, Ross Mowre and Joe Timms in the mile run; Ross and Chris Ridel in the two-mile run; Emmett Briggs and Ken Waller in the triple jump; and a mile relay team.

Women 'hai' on self-defense

By JERRY ELAM

"The time has come for women to let their hair down and accept such responsibilities as being able to defend themselves against aggressors when a man isn't around to protect her."

This statement was made by Frank Comparato, a graduate assistant in physical education who is currently teaching a class in self-defense for women.

"Developing the skills of defense doesn't mean a woman must discard her coat of femininity," Comparato said, "because she can remain feminine to the world while possessing the ability to defend herself."

Comparato, who received his self-defense training under Peter Musacchio (a noted karate instructor) at Central New York Karate School, Syracuse, expressed two principal objectives of the class: to provide a minimum degree of self-defense proficiency and to provide women with an awareness of defense in any social setting, whether it be against her boyfriend or a rapist.

Comparato feels 98 per cent of the women who enroll in the self-defense class would be able to defend themselves under normal circumstances.

According to Comparato, if the women who were molested or attacked on campus last semester had taken this course, they could have fought off their aggressor. He cited one instance where a girl who had taken his class in New York was attacked by a mugger, but managed to escape unharmed.

"Success in self-defense depends greatly upon one's ability and motivation," he continued. "But the most important aspect of defense is frame of mind. Defense is more than fighting because you know what you can or cannot do."

The class of 26 coeds is learning the basic methods of defense, according to Comparato.

"In most instances when women are attacked, they scream for help," he said. "This is the one thing they should not do because it may lead the assailant to a more extreme degree of aggression. A woman with self-defense training will not panic because she knows her capabilities of self-protection."

Comparato also felt that the women's self-defense class would be a motivation for men to learn methods of defense. "It would be quite embarrassing to be confronted with a situation that necessitated self-defense, and your female companion had to be the one to defend you," he said.

Furgerson. "He (Farrell) was tremendously disappointed because they had given him so much encouragement. I thought he would probably go in the seventh or eighth round. The prognostics were pretty optimistic about him."

Farrell, who caught 84 passes for 612 yards and five touchdowns, has received a contract from the World Football League's Chicago Fire, however. "So, apparently he'll play for somebody."

McCoy and Jackson both will wait for the upcoming second phase of the World League's 60-round draft before negotiating contracts.

And Williams and Noller? Well, they'll just have to keep their fingers crossed.

An article in the Louisville Courier-Journal stating that basketball coach Jim Richards' job was in jeopardy brought a few laughs when a reporter approached him in his office.

"Is that the hot seat? I've been hearing so much about," the reporter asked.

Richards, jumping to his feet, stated, "Yes, you better believe it! Just sit down in this red thing and tell me it isn't hot. It gets awfully uncomfortable here sometimes."

And, with Fly Williams up to his old antics again, it appears coach Lake Kelly has had enough. But not really enough.

Kelly suspended the sophomore superstar indefinitely, according to a recent news release. But reports are circulating that Kelly already has lifted the suspension.

So "Indefinitely" probably means until the Governors fly to New York, Fly's hometown, for a date with Long Island University in Madison Square Garden Saturday night.

Kinnear starts wrestling club

A wrestling club has been formed at Western under the direction of Dr. George Kinnear, faculty adviser, and Jeff Krieg, student adviser.

This is not a team, but a club for students wishing to pay the $10 fee. The club is composed of 12 members at this time.

The club meets every Monday at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday at 6 p.m., and Thursday at 6 p.m. in Smith Stadium.

"We would like to travel around the state and meet some teams, perhaps Kentucky, Morehead, Louisville in some informal contests to get our club started," said Kinnear, a former freshman wrestling coach at the University of Maryland.

Riflers face UK, Eastern

Western's riflery team will travel to Lexington tomorrow for what coach Wilson Farmer calls "our toughest match of the year."

The Hiltoppers will face two of their Kentucky League opponents-Eastern and the University of Kentucky.

Farmer said, "Eastern and Kentucky are averaging higher than we have. But our shooting has been improving and we've been working hard."

Western has a league record of 1-1, beating Morehead, losing to Murray. The Hiltoppers are 3-4 overall.

that game and the swing into East Tennessee next weekend, the schedule would clearly favor Western. Four of the Topper's five remaining conference games are at home against the best the league has to offer.

And the way things are going in the Ohio Valley Conference right now, you can't be surprised at what can happen. The next home game, however, is nonconference action. The Hiltoppers will be home Monday to take on highly-regarded and long-time rival Dayton in Diddle Arena.
