Youth and 'Rocking Grannies' liven up lives

Dr. Lois Layne, professor of psychology, directs the University's interdisciplinary gerontology program which operates the Adult Day Health Care Center in the Jones-Jaggers Building. The center has enjoyed success in the Bowling Green-Warren County community. The following piece, written by Dr. Layne, is about intergenerational activities at the Center which have proven to be valuable for the older adults as well as the young.

By Lois Layne

The generations are connecting at the Adult Day Care Center. Intergenerational activities bring young and old together as part of the Center's active programming. Activities are designed to facilitate the mutual enjoyment and appreciation that transpire when relationships between the generations are allowed to grow.

The generation gap is bridged and youngsters are introduced to a generation of elders who have many life experiences and talents to share. Elders re-experience the enthusiasm and energy of youth. At its best, intergenerational programming meets the needs of both segments of the population and helps to combat age stereotypes.

Infants, pre-schoolers, grade schoolers, teens and college students regularly interact with the 40 frail, disabled or isolated older adults who attend the Day Center. The activities offer benefits for the older adults, some of whom suffer from Alzheimer's disease or other dementias. Twice a week, a couple of "Rocking Grannies" from the Center visit the WKU Child Care, conveniently located next door to the Adult Day Health Care Center and Warren County Schools also visit regularly and often bring interesting projects or songs that can be enjoyed by young and old.

A paper patchwork quilt was the product of one visit. In a new program which started in January, seven teenagers in LifeSkills, Inc.'s Day Treatment Program, an alternative school for high school students referred by the court system, visit the Center weekly.

The teens talk with their new older friends and may be found pushing wheelchairs and assisting in other ways. The older adults are concerned about their new young friends and hope that their friendship and encouragement will make a difference.

Before their first visit, the teens were not sure they wanted to visit a "bunch of old people," but they returned talking about the interesting new people they had met and were suggesting ways that they could help at the Center! The heart of the intergenerational program is the more than 100 WKU students who spend time at the Center each semester as volunteers, employees or as part of a class requirement. The students are enrolled in classes in nursing, psychology, public health, communication disorders, social work, recreation, health care administration and exceptional education. Their activities at the Center depend on interests and training and can include assessing memory, taking blood pressures, playing checkers, assisting with exercises or conducting speech therapy with a stroke victim.

Center participants take their jobs of helping students seriously, and close friendships are formed. Students often come back to visit and volunteer after they have completed their required hours. Students say they are surprised to find that the participants are "colorful and interesting people." Students emphasize that they received more than they gave to the program. One student said, "It's a good experience and it makes you feel better about yourself." Another observed, "The elderly are good teachers."

The WKU Adult Day Health Care Center is open Monday through Friday from 8:45 a.m. until 4:45 p.m. The Center is a rapidly growing community-based service for the increasing number of elderly in our nation. Goals of the Center include:

* assisting frail and disabled elderly, allowing them to remain in their homes;
* providing respite for families of Alzheimer's victims, relieving stress and providing support;
* allowing families to maintain employment, knowing that their elderly family member is being cared for and
* providing emotional support and socialization for isolated elderly.

The ADHCC is funded, in part, under a contract with the Barren River Area Development District (BRADD) and the Cabinet for Human Resources. Funds are also provided by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Resources. Additionally, clients may qualify on a private pay basis. The Center's phone number is 2021.
Bob Edwards, host of National Public Radio’s morning news program “Morning Edition,” will visit Western Kentucky University Monday, March 8. Edwards will be participating in the first Spring Membership Drive for Western’s Public Radio Service.

A native of Louisville, Edwards is recognized as one of this country’s leading broadcast journalists. “Morning Edition” has become a model for both radio and television journalists.

Edwards is currently on leave from the program to write a book about his relationship with the late sportscaster Red Barber. Barber was a weekly “Morning Edition” guest for many years.

While in Bowling Green, Edwards will be on the air as local co-host for “Morning Edition” between 6 a.m. and 8 a.m. He will then sit in on the “Local Edition” and “Music in the Morning” programs until 10 a.m., helping station staff to raise new membership funds to help support program costs.

At noon, Edwards will meet with print and broadcast journalism students for lunch in the Downing University Center and then will tape an “Outlook” program to be broadcast by both Western’s Public Radio Service and WKU-TV.

In the evening, Edwards will be the speaker at a banquet in his honor at the Garrett Conference Center Ballroom on Western’s campus. Tickets for the dinner are available by calling Western’s Public Radio Service at 6488 or 1-800-599-WKYU. Tickets will not be sold at the door.

Western’s Public Radio Service consists of: WKYU-88.9FM, Bowling Green; WDCL-89.7 FM, Somerset; WKPB-89.5FM, Henderson-Owensboro, and WKUE-90.9FM, Elizabethtown.

State’s scientists honor WKU’s Wilkins

Curtis C. Wilkins, professor of chemistry, is one of two science teachers in Kentucky to receive top honors from the Kentucky Academy of Science (KAS).

Wilkins has been named the Outstanding College University Science Teacher, and Andrea L. Warren, chairman of the science department at Franklin-Simpson High School was named Outstanding Secondary School Science Teacher.

Wilkins, a member of Western’s faculty since 1965, teaches more than 100 students general chemistry each semester. According to the awards committee, his credentials in teaching physical chemistry are excellent, but he excels at teaching general freshman chemistry.

“Even though his expectations for excellence from his students are high, he is well liked and appreciated by these students, especially when they realize how well prepared they are for the upper level chemistry courses,” the committee said.

Wilkins has published papers in the Journal of Chemical Education and given presentations at local, regional and national American Chemical Society meetings. He has created computer programs for students and is currently producing TV cassette tapes for student instruction. He received his doctorate degree at Michigan State University.

Kentucky Legislative Research Commission

Marion B. Lucas, History, has authored A History of Blacks in Kentucky: From Slavery to Segregation, 1760-1891, published by the Kentucky Historical Society.

Joe Survant has published poems in Down the River: a Collection of Ohio Valley Fiction and Poetry; Nimrod International Journal of Poetry and Prose; Exquisite Corpse: The Cloverdale Review of Criticism and Poetry; the National Poetry Competition Anthology and No Roses Review. His poetry won an honorable mention award in the Pablo Neruda Prize for Poetry competition from Nimrod and the Arts and Humanities Council of Tulsa.

Tim C. Wilkins, professor of chemistry, has one of the best general education courses in the state, according to the awards committee.

The Third Edition of Environmental Science: Living Within the System of Nature, co-authored by Charles E. Kupchella, Dean, Ogden College, WKU and Margaret Hyland, associate director of the Kentucky Legislative Research Commission, was published by Prentice Hall in January.

Dr. Jim Babcock, professor of French, will have portions of his translation of J.K. Huysman’s The Vatard Sisters University Press of Kentucky 1983 included in a new volume on Huysman, authored by Brian Banks, to be published in March.

Western Kentucky University has acquired editorial and publication responsibilities for the Kentucky Journal of Economics and Business, and Dr. John C. Wasson and Dr. Thomas O. Wisley of WKU’s Department of Economics will serve as co-editors of the journal.

The peer-reviewed journal is a joint publishing venture between WKU and the Kentucky Economics Association. The journal publishes articles on a wide range of economic and business topics. The first issue of the journal under the auspices of WKU is planned for October 1993.

OCR makes Post Office happy!
This is the new format for official university mail, created by logo designer Gil Stengel to better satisfy postal regulations. The old envelopes dangled WKU's zip code on the return address into the OCR's read area, so the post office was kicking back lots of our mail. After you use all your old envelopes, this is what the Print Shop will send you from now on.
Women's studies call for papers

The Program Committee for the 7th annual Women's Studies Conference has called for papers for the 1993 conference scheduled for Sep. 24 and 25. This year's theme is "Discovering Our Past, Defining Our Future." Abstracts must be received by March 8 to be considered. Volunteers to moderate sessions also are needed. Interested persons should send a vita to indicate areas of expertise. Selections will be announced by June 15.

The conference sponsor is the Potter College Women's Studies and Support Programs of WKU. Address all inquiries and abstracts to the Program Committee, WKU Women's Studies Conference, 200 Fine Arts Center. Phone numbers are 3634 and 6477.

Looking for your ideas

The Ideas for Efficiency Committee has new membership and they're looking for suggestions for ways to make Western work better. The Committee was established by President Thomas Meredith to give faculty and staff "an opportunity to submit ideas that they have which will make Western Kentucky University operate in a more efficient and/or effective manner," Dr. Meredith said in a memo charging new members to call in ideas from across campus. Committee Chair is Judy Byrd, Registrar's office.

Send any ideas you have to the chair & the Office of the Registrar, Wetherby Administration Building. They must be in writing. Other committee members are:
- Dr. Tom Dunn,
- sociology and anthropology;
- David Fields, student representative;
- Jim Garner, Academic Advising;
- Don Gray, Physical Plant;
- Patty Randolph, psychology department and
- Elaine Williams, career services.

A Night of Gershwin and Andrew Lloyd Webber

$7 general admission
$4 students/seniors

Why you should return calls

If you want to climb the career ladder, you should return calls. Here's why:
- The person calling may be in the minor leagues today but could be a major league player tomorrow, one with a long memory.
- If you don't return calls, you'll eventually gain a bad reputation—as a "rude power jerk."
- A headhunter may be calling.
- You don't know what you're letting slip through the cracks.
